GMA sparks SARS scare

The President announces first 'probable' SARS case minus confirmatory testing

By Dona Z. Pazzibugan and Armand N. Nocum

WE'RE back to being SARS-free.

That's President Macapagal-Arroyo declaring to the world the purported condition of the Philippines after having its first "probable SARS case" in a 64-year-old male foreigner who was supposedly likely infected during one of his regular trips to Hong Kong.

At her daily teleconference yesterday in Malacañang, the President said that the unnamed foreigner had been in isolation at an undisclosed hospital since April 1 and has been cured, but she wanted him confined for another week for observation.

She also said authorities had tracked the people the patient had been in contact with, and none of them had shown signs of sickness.

"So we're SARS-free again," she beamed.

It was unclear why the President saw fit to announce the case of the foreigner—a German, according to reliable sources.

The World Health Organization Western Pacific Regional Office in Manila had no information on the matter. Sought for comment later in the day, it said: "We are waiting for confirmation from the DOH (Department of Health)."

At the teleconference, Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit said the patient never developed respiratory distress (or shortness of breath), a symptom of the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome.

"He was to be discharged," the health secretary added. "He's already cured; he no longer has fever. But his stay in the hospital will be extended if only to make sure he's really cured."

One of the Philippines' top pulmonologists, who is familiar with the case, told the INQUIRER categorically that the patient did not have SARS.

"How did they confirm?" the pulmonologist said. "There's no confirmatory test for SARS. Before they open their big mouths and panic people, they have to be sure. And I tell you, this patient had

S'pore puts SARS suspects on camera

SINGAPORE has taken drastic measures to enforce quarantine orders on hundreds of people suspected of exposure to the SARS virus, including mounting "Webcams" in homes and threatening to use electronic wrist bands.

Those quarantined "will be called at random intervals daily and requested to turn on the camera and present themselves in front of the camera to show their presence," Singapore's Ministry of Health said Thursday.

In Hong Kong yesterday, a spokesperson for the Hospital Authority said a 55-year-old man suspected of SARS infection escaped early Wednesday from the Prince of Wales Hospital after being held in quarantine.

The man was caught by police on Thursday and returned to the hospital, one of the major outbreak centers of the deadly Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome in the former British colony.

The SARS suspect escaped after demanding that the hospital release him so he could return to his home in Southern

Bedlam in Baghdad: Intense, massive looting

HOME is where the loot is. Two Iraqi women push a cart loaded to a whole sala set taken from a furniture store in Baghdad on Thursday.

BAGHDAD—United States forces in Iraq yesterday grappled with looting and civil disorder, scattered gun fights, the brutal murder of a Shi'ite religious leader in a holy shrine and a suicide bomb attack on Thursday, which shattered much of the euphoria that had marked the end of Saddam Hussein's rule.

In the absence of any government, shopkeepers in Baghdad began shooting at looters for the first time as the city plunged into chaos.

"We want the law to rule and if the Americans don't defend us then we'll defend ourselves with our own weapons," said one shopkeeper, Khazen Hussein.

Twenty-five people sustained gunshot wounds in looting-related clashes, hospital sources said, while the International Committee of the Red Cross said one of the city's hospitals was in a "chaotic and catastrophic" state.

US forces said their first priority had to be rooting out remaining resistance before tackling the difficult task of restoring order.

A correspondent reported seeing a fresh outbreak of intense looting in an area newly abandoned by non-Iraqi Arab paramilitary fighters. The Trade Ministry building was on fire, he added.

Looters carted off bottles of wine and whisky, guns and paintings of half-naked women on Thursday from the home of Uday, Saddam's feared playboy son. They also picked clean his yacht and made off with some of his white Arabian horses.

Severe looting has also raged in the southern city of Basra, now under the military control of British troops.

Hundreds of Iraqi civilians besieged the national headquarters of Iraq's military intelligence, searching for relatives they say had been detained there.

Aid officials said US and British troops were obliged by international law to prevent chaos.

"The picture is a very dark one. There

Amnesty Int'l 'shocked' by RP treatment of young offenders

By Christine O. Avendaño

THE PHILIPPINES has laws that protect the rights of children involved in crimes, but the country's authorities do not implement them adequately.

"We are shocked by the huge discrepancy between the youth justice system and that exercised in practice," the human rights group Amnesty International said in its report on the Philippines, "A different childhood: The apprehension and detention of child suspects and offenders."

AI noted how children are handcuffed upon arrest, put in cells for adult criminals and how some of them received prison sentences meant for adults.

"There are serious and widespread defects in the administration of juvenile justice in the Philippines that must be urgently addressed," AI said.

"We urge the Philippine government to ensure that child detainees are treated in accordance with international standards, and to immediately and im-

Meralco's serious financial woes worry Palace

By Carlito Pablo

MERALCO, the country's largest power firm, now faces serious financial problems—and even Malacañang knows it.

Presidential spokesperson Ignacio Bunye yesterday said the "long-term viability" of the Lopez family-controlled firm must be considered in determining how it will implement the refund ordered by the Supreme Court. But Bunye also repeated his previous statement that President Macapagal-Arroyo was committed to enforcing the landmark SC decision.

"We need to balance the decision of the Supreme Court with what is good for the long-term viability of Meralco," Bunye said over government-owned radio station dzRB. "This is important because Meralco supplies much of our electricity."

Bunye said that determining the mode of refund was the task of the Energy Regulatory Commission, now chaired by Manuel Sanchez, appointed by the President just days before the high court "denied with finality" Meralco's motion for reconsideration.

"It's very important that we keep the firm viable," Bunye said.

Noting that the ERC would have to determine the value of the refund and the length of time for repayment, Meralco spokesperson Elpi Cuna echoed Bunye.

Sale of 7 US properties in US to net P3.3 billion

By Jerry Esplanada

THE SIX-STORY building on East 66th St. in New York City called the Philippine Townhouse has gone through many ups and downs. Built in 1916, it was the site of many of Imelda Marcos' fabulous New York parties in the 1980s. By 1994, it had fallen into disuse.

A two-and-a-half-year renovation by Ada Ledesma-Mabilangan, wife of the former Permanent Representative to the UN, restored it to its former glory by 1997. Now this property owned by the Philippine government, for the past five years the official residence of the country's Permanent Representative to the UN, is about to go through a new low. It is about to be placed on the auction block.

Regency Capital Realty, a US firm, estimated the property's current fair market value at $17.5 million (about P960 million at an exchange rate of P55 to the dollar).

Ex-Sen. Francisco Tatad has described the proposed sale of the Philippine Townhouse and six other government-owned properties as a "desperate move" by the Macapagal administration.

Youth owns Davao airport bombing

17-year-old says he did it for a shirt

By Anthony S. Allada and Ayan C. Mellejor
PDI Mindanao Bureau

DAVAO CITY—One of the five arrested suspects in the two recent bombings here has confessed to having carried the deadly explosives in the March 4 bombing of the Davao City Airport, investigators here said.

Seventeen-year-old Sammy (not his real name) and the four other suspects arrested in Cotabato City on Tuesday—Johanne Bagundang and Esmail Almad, both of Kabuntulan, Maguindanao; Ismael Mamalangas of Malagapes, Cotabato City and Ting Idar, of Matampay, Sultan Kudarat—were yesterday charged with multiple murder and multiple frustrated murder for the airport blast and the Sasa wharf bombing on April 2.

Sammy executed an extra-judicial confession on Thursday in which he claimed to have been the one who placed the backpack containing the explosives on an empty bench in the crowded waiting shed of the airport.

Top Moro Islamic Liberation Front leaders, including Salamat Hashim, Murad Ebrahim, Ghazali Jaafar and Eid Kabalu, were also included in the charges, along with more than 100 people, 30 of whom were identified only as John Does.

Davao City Mayor Rodrigo Duterte said the inclusion of the MILF in the charges was based on the admission of Mamalangas and Almad that they were active members of the MILF.

Investigators also claimed that the MILF had used Bagundang and Sammy in its bombing activities.

"This is a break. The Criminal Investigation and Detection Group has done a splendid job. But I am sad because not all of the respondents are in our custody," Duterte told the reporters here.

Also yesterday, state prosecutor Augusto Gonzales moved for the dismissal of the murder charges against Tirso Sudang and Undangan Sudang, both barangay officials of Kabanacan, North Cotabato, the first set of suspects in the airport bombing.

Gonzales said there was insufficient evidence against the Sudangs who were arrested when they went to claim the body of a relative, 18-year-old Montasser, who died in the airport blast.

Police and military authorities said the Sudangs plotted the airport bombing and had sent Montasser to carry out the deed. The Sudangs said Montasser was at the airport to fetch a cousin who was returning from Egypt.

North Cotabato Gov. Emmanuel Piñol said he would talk to Duterte and request the Sudangs' release and also arrange for them to be compensated for their unjust arrest.

But in his affidavit, Sammy said he was never a member of the MILF nor did he belong to the rebel group's special urban terrorist action group (Sutag).

Bomb in backpack

Sammy, who is jobless and a resident of Cotabato City, said he was not aware that the backpack contained a bomb.

He said Bagundang, Almad, Mamalangas and Idar had convinced him to go with them to Davao City and promised to buy him a new shirt.

Besides looking forward to a new shirt, he agreed because he had never set foot in Davao City. Sammy said he was taken by the group in a passenger jeepney to what he later learned was the airport. Almad gave him the backpack and instructed him to place it in the waiting shed and leave right away.

He rushed back to the jeepney where the other suspects were waiting. A few minutes later, Sammy said he heard a loud explosion.

After eating, he said he and the suspects went into a grocery store to buy some items but there was no t-shirt.

The five then returned to Cotabato City. With a report from Nico Alconaba, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Last of 4 Indon hostages freed

By Martin P. Marfil

THE LAST of four Indonesian hostages abducted by the Abu Sayyaf last year is free.

Military officials yesterday said the hostage, Pieter Lerrich, was found in Patikul, Sulu, after the Abu Sayyaf faction holding him abandoned him in Barangay Kad-day Matullam.

Armed Forces vice chief of staff Lt. Gen. Rodolfo Garcia said the Abu Sayyaf group holding Lerrich was spotted by elements of the Marine Battalion Landing Team 4 at around 11:30 a.m. yesterday.

The group scampered away when it sensed that government troops were nearby, leaving Lerrich behind, Garcia said.

Lerrich was recovered unharmed by a barangay captain who turned him over to the military. He was brought to 3rd Marine Brigade headquarters in Luuk, Sulu to be debriefed.

The victim is expected to be presented to President Macapagal-Arroyo.

The Associated Press and Agence France Presse, however, quoted Brig. Gen. Romeo Tolentino, deputy military chief for the southern Philippines, as saying Lerrich was rescued after the military raided the rebels' hideout in Patikul.

He said the rebels did not put up a fight but ran away.

Lerrich was one of four Indonesians seized from their tugboat by the Abu Sayyaf on June 17, 2002 off Basilan.

Two of the four managed to escape their captors at different times, while a third died in the crossfire when government troops engaged the Abu Sayyaf in one of their numerous encounters.

The Abu Sayyaf is still holding four women members of the Jehovah's Witnesses sect as well as Roland Ulliah, the Filipino cook it abducted from a Sipadan, Malaysia resort in April 2000.

Lerrich will undergo a physical exam by military doctors but he appeared to be in good health, Tolentino said.

He said the authorities could not independently confirm the reported death of hostage Muntu Jacobos Winowatan, but rescuers found no evidence of his presence in the Abu Sayyaf hideout on Friday.

Indonesian Embassy spokesperson Triyogo Jatmiko told AFP: "It is a relief to hear Pieter is alive and well. We are grateful to the Philippine government and the military for this."

He said the embassy was awaiting confirmation from the Philippine government on the fate of Winowatan.

Troops were pursuing the guerrillas in the jungle, Tolentino said.

SC asked to extend freeze on 'dirty' money

By Clarissa Batino

THE ANTI-MONEY Laundering Council has asked the Supreme Court to extend its freeze order on P1.08 billion in bank accounts believed linked to criminal activities, including pyramid scams.

Otherwise, the funds corresponding to 29 cases related to money laundering, which are pending before the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court could disappear, the AMLC said.

The council, in a press statement, recalled that Section 12 of the amended Anti-Money Laundering Act provides that "existing freeze orders issued by the AMLC shall remain in force for a period of 30 days" after the law takes effect, unless extended by the Court of Appeals.

The law took effect on March 23, and the thirty-day period expires on April 22.

The AMLC, through the Office of the Solicitor General, also filed before the Supreme Court on April 3 "very urgent motions" to remand seven anti-money laundering cases to the Court of Appeals for resolution.

These cases had been pending before the high court on a petition for review on certiorari, questioning the appellate court's decision to dismiss them for lack of jurisdiction.

On April 4, the AMLC, again through the OSG, asked the Court of Appeals to determine the existence of probable cause for extending the freeze orders on the 29 cases.

Report vs Ping not credible, says Angara

By Cynthia D. Balana

OPPOSITION Sen. Edgardo Angara yesterday said the Senate committee report which recommended the filing of charges against Sen. Panfilo Lacson for alleged involvement in organized crime was not credible and was full of loopholes.

Angara, who issued a dissenting opinion on the report that was being routed to senators for their signature, said he concurred with Committee Report 66, except for some findings.

"A careful evaluation of the report would yield that it has no factual and legal bases to carry the weight of its conclusions. There is scant and insufficient evidence to reasonably link Senator Lacson to allegations of organized criminal activities," he said.

The committee on public order and illegal drugs, the lead committee in the inquiry, was about to release the report in June last year when the opposition staged a Senate coup to oust Senate President Franklin Drilon and effect changes in the chairmanship of the various committees.

Sen. Robert Barbers, chair of the committee on public order, and Sen. Joker Arroyo, chair of the blue ribbon committee, believed the coup was a minority ploy to preempt the release of the report and prevent Majority Leader Loren Legarda from including it in the calendar of business.

At the time, only pro-administration senators, who composed the majority in the Senate, had signed the report.

A copy of the report was leaked to the media but the report was temporarily shelved because of the disagreements between the two factions in the Senate as a result of the failed Senate coup.

Majority senators tried to resurrect the report early this year but the minority demanded that it be routed to opposition members in the three committees for signing.

BF's dual posts questioned anew

By Juliet Labog-Javellana

SEVERAL congressmen are questioning anew the appointment of Bayan Fernando as concurrent chair of the Metro Manila Development Authority and acting public works secretary.

Negros Oriental Rep. Jacinto Paras, chair of the House committee on transportation and communications, said Fernando's dual position is clearly violative of the Constitution.

He said he, Surigao del Sur Rep. Prospero Pichay and three other congressmen will seek a formal House investigation into the appointment.

In their resolution, the congressmen asked the House justice and public works committees to investigate the "constitutional violation committed in the concurrent appointment" of Fernando.

They said that after Fernando was appointed MMDA chair last year, he "subsequently assumed and performed the functions of DPWH secretary without relinquishing his post as MMDA chair and he has in fact continued to discharge his duties as MMDA chair."

"(He) has since then been interchangeably referred to as secretary of DPWH and Chair of MMDA," they said.

They said it was a direct violation of the Constitution which states in Section 13, Article 7 that the "President, Vice President and members of the Cabinet and their deputies or assistants shall not, unless otherwise provided in this Constitution, hold any other office or employment during their tenure."

But more than the legality, the congressmen apparently has another beef with Fernando's handling of the DPWH.

"Since his appointment as acting DPWH secretary, his concentration has been in Metro Manila to the prejudice of the provinces. He has in fact caused the delay in so many local and foreign-funded projects," Paras said in an interview.

Paras said not only Fernando will be in peril if he persists in his illegal dual position.

"It may also open the President (Macapagal-Arroyo) to culpable violation of the Constitution," said Paras, a member of the ruling party Lakas.

He said the President cannot continue to not submit the names of Fernando and other Cabinet secretaries to the bicameral Commission on Appointments.

He said Fernando was named acting DPWH secretary only apparently to go around the constitutional prohibition on dual positions.

"He has to keep just one position otherwise he and his principals will be liable for flagrant violation of the Constitution," Paras said.

'PRICE OF STATESMANSHIP'

No regrets, says GMA of low ratings

By Carlito Pablo

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo said that she has no regrets about supporting the United States-led war against Iraq even as her popularity rating has plunged to negative 14 in a survey by the Social Weather Stations.

President Macapagal said that her actions may sometimes be misunderstood "but a leader must never hesitate to make a decision for fear of being misunderstood."

"I shall never allow public opinion to deter me from a rightful and moral course," the President said in a statement released by Malacañang yesterday morning.

The SWS said that based on its March 10-25 survey, Ms Macapagal endured a "very low" net satisfaction rating of negative 14, which it noted was lower than the "already meager" net positive 6 in November 2002.

In her statement, Ms Macapagal said that leaders like her have to "take blows for standing on principle."

"I have taken the blows often enough on many vital issues and I have no regret about decisions," she said.

Members of the House of Representatives expressed confidence that the public estimation of the Macapagal leadership would bounce back now that she was proven right in her support of the coalition offensive in Iraq.

For Rep. Leovigildo Banaag (NPC/Lakas, Agusan del Norte), "the President's firm stance on the Iraq crisis revealed her as less of a politician and more of a statesman, and placed her in the ranks of world leaders who took the difficult, unpopular road and were vindicated by the outcome of the war."

"The recent drop in the Social Weather Stations rating of the President was the price to pay for an unpopular, albeit accurate assessment of the Iraq issue," said Rep. Amado Espino (Lakas, Pangasinan). "Remember that the SWS polling period of March 10-25 was the height of anti-war anxiety over the safety of overseas workers, the exchange rate, the supply of oil and the prices of basic goods," he said.

"However, these fears proved unfounded and the President was vindicated," he said. He cited her track record in food and energy security, the peace negotiations, the capture of terrorists in Mindanao, and the prevention of the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome.

Espino added that the country must now address the challenges of agriculture productivity, revenue generation, infrastructure development, unemployment and poverty.

Other congressmen who expressed optimism regarding the President's future ratings were defense committee chair Prospero Pichay (Lakas, Surigao del Sur), housing committee chair Prospero Nograles (Lakas, Davao City), accounts committee chair Robert "Ace" Barbers (Lakas, Surigao del Norte) and Rep. Willie Villaroma (Aksyon Demokratiko, Bulacan).

Barbers said the foreign affairs department is confident that a new, democratic Iraq would stabilize the Middle East and spur new growth in the world economy. In line with this, the DFA has vowed that Philippine economic diplomacy will go into high gear to ensure the Philippines a vital role in the rebuilding of Iraq, he said.

Pichay for his part said the rescue of the last Indonesian captive of the Abu Sayyaf augurs well for an improved peace and order situation in the country. He commended the Marines for the rescue and urged the military to step up its efforts versus terrorism.

New Iraqi envoy to RP in 'limbo'

By Norman Bordadora

IRAQI Ambassador Faizal Hussein arrived here in February and has been waiting to present his credentials to President Macapagal-Arroyo, but developments in Iraq this week may mean he may never get to be recognized as Baghdad's representative here.

Once a new Iraqi government is formed in the wake of the United States-led coalition forces' victory against the Saddam Hussein regime, a new set of embassy personnel would be sent to Manila, Foreign Secretary Blas Ople said yesterday.

Hussein, charge d'affaires Samir Blus and two other diplomats in the Iraqi Embassy here would "fall into some kind of limbo," the foreign secretary said.

'Awkward'

Ople said the Department of Foreign Affairs continues to be in touch with the Iraqi diplomats at the embassy in Makati's Dasmariñas Village but admits that Saddam's fall has made dealing with the Iraqi envoys rather "awkward."

"One way of putting it is that we are still waiting for a new legitimate government in Iraq. Once the government is established, we will probably recognize it and the effect will be to disenfranchise the present crop of Iraqi officials in Manila," he said.

Asked if there was a possibility of Hussein getting accredited, Ople said: "We have to ask what government he represents."

"The Philippines is a sovereign state and it reserves the right to deal with foreign embassies according to its needs and requirements but also having in mind the law of nations. So it is an awkward situation right now," he said.

Hussein arrived in the country just two days after the embassy's second secretary Husham Husain was expelled for allegedly plotting with local terrorists the bomb attack in Zamboanga City late last year.

He was able to call on Ople once but has yet to present his credentials to the President.

No credentials

The DFA has said that the delay in Hussein's presentation of credentials was caused by the Ms Macapagal's tight schedule.

Hussein's situation was compounded when the US State Department in March asked the governments of 60 countries to expel Iraqi diplomats who were allegedly acting as spies for Baghdad.

The US move was meant to pressure Saddam out of office just before the coalition attack on Iraq.

Shortly thereafter, the government expelled two more Iraqi diplomats. Ople said the diplomats were caught spying on US facilities just as US diplomatic officials here were preparing to celebrate Memorial Day in November 2002.

Ople denied that there was any connection between the latest expulsion and the US request.

2 fast-food outlets listed as erring taxpayer

By Clarissa S. Batino and Michelle V. Remo

TWO outlets of giant fast-food chains were added yesterday to the Bureau of Internal Revenue's list of erring taxpayers.

During a tax-mapping campaign in Quezon City yesterday, the bureau's raiding team found the McDonald's and Kentucky Fried Chicken outlets on Banaue Street violating a BIR policy.

Director Danilo Duncano of the BIR North QC district office said one cash machine at the McDonald's outlet and all eight at KFC were not duly registered with the bureau.

Duncano said the BIR would announce the total number of violators caught in yesterday's operation as soon as all reports were consolidated.

KFC-Banaue branch manager Dianne Tibor said management had merely failed to attach notices of registration to the machines. "The notices were delivered to us from our main office after the BIR personnel had left," Tibor said.

In a statement, McDonald's managing director Joseph Lau said the use of one unregistered cash machine in the Banaue branch was just an "oversight."

"McDonald's, for 22 years, has consistently paid taxes... in a punctual and accurate manner," Lau said. "We are now working with the BIR for (corrective) measures."

On Wednesday, more than 1,000 tax violators, including a Pilipinas Shell gasoline station in Las Piñas City, were snared in simultaneous raids along the Alabang-Zapote Road and in a commercial area in Caloocan City.

BIR Commissioner Guillermo Parayno Jr. said this revealed a "massive and widespread violation of tax rules."

Crisis mismanagement

IN THE FACE of crises, there has been a busy show of strategic planning and management in the Macapagal administration. So must the nation rest content because the government has the situation under control? No, not when crisis after crisis breaks out, catching the government, which loves to proclaim to one and all that it is strategically prepared, flat-footed. Consider:

• After the bombings in Davao and Central Mindanao, President Macapagal-Arroyo appointed Davao City Mayor Rodrigo Duterte as crisis manager for the South and Central Mindanao. Considering that he is only a mayor, how can we expect Gov. Manny Piñol of North Cotabato, for example, to take orders from him? Anyway Duterte did a poor job. He certainly had heard of the saying that lightning doesn't strike twice; but it's just that he forgot the other half of the saying—"in the same place." So the March 4 airport bombing was followed by the April 2 blast at the Sasa wharf. Both were "vital installations" Duterte's men were supposed to guard; it was just that they seemed to have gotten enamored of the stewardesses of the airport and repulsed by the smelly stewards at the wharf.

• Later Malacanan realized it had to fire somebody, so it fired the security chief of the Sasa wharf, with Presidential Spokesperson Ignacio Bunye saying as an afterthought that the same should have been done also with the Davao airport chief of security (no, he is not capable of irony). But if not Duterte, the Palace should have fired Isafp chief Col. Victor Corpus because the Sasa bombing was obviously a failure of intelligence. But it couldn't do so because Corpus knows a lot about Sen. Panfilo Lacson. Ask Ador Mawanay.

• National Security Adviser Roilo Golez came out with one of his facetious remarks that the fact that the bombings happened outside the main facilities should prove that security was really tight inside. Hello? Twenty-two people died and over 100 were injured at the airport waiting shed, while 16 died and 65 were hurt at the Sasa wharf. Perhaps Golez should include in Duterte's marching order not only "vital installations" but "vital parts." To be sure, vital organs lay splattered in the two sites that were bombed.

• But Golez has another bright idea. He has proposed the formation of a "homeland security agency," obviously a copy of George W. Bush's bright idea. (Come to think of it, Golez's portfolio is a copy of the American national security adviser, a position used by Henry Kissinger to pit himself against the secretary of state, whose post he coveted unabashedly.) Just asking: If we adopt Golez's idea, what are the police and the military supposed to do now?

Ah, but Defense Secretary Angelo Reyes wouldn't be outdone. He has proposed his own "internal defense security command." The nomenclature has changed but it's the same bureaucratic disease of creating an office for every imaginable need there is. For a career officer, Reyes seems ignorant that the PNP and AFP are in charge of internal defense and security—and they already have lots and lots of commanders and command centers. Obviously he wants more headless chickens to run around every time there's a crisis.

Crisis opportunism

REYES himself personifies what is wrong with the administration's mania for "strategic planning." In the wake of crisis after crisis, he has upgraded the status of the area coordinating centers (ACCs) so that they have become key facilities of different councils—for peace and order, for disaster coordination and for crisis management—that can be used during emergencies.

Many of these councils were creations of Fidel Ramos when he was defense secretary and became his excuse for meeting local officials when he was contemplating a run for the presidency. So is Reyes doing a Ramos? Ask his aides. Reyes has been inaugurating ACCs left and right. But are they effective in preempting or coping with crises? The answer is obvious if one goes by the crises breaking out left and right. At the very least, the ACCs are a mismanagement of resources because their facilities and equipment should have gone to the police, which is constitutionally mandated to take care of public safety and order and whose functions they duplicate.

So are "strategic planning" and "crisis management" the fig leaves to the banality of Philippine politics? As the adage goes, with crisis comes an opportunity. Nowadays, we not only have crisis managers, but crisis opportunists as well.

Unconscionable tuition fees

SEPARATE OPINION

ship for Jesus as the Son of God.

Recognized by our government and other countries, APNTS has been operating in this country for the past 20 years. Cynthia is only the second of its hundreds of alumni to graduate summa cum laude. The students come from Korea, Japan, India, China, and other Asian countries. Many of them write their thanks to the unidentified sponsors who pay their tuition fees, their names and addresses in blank to be filled by their denomination leaders.

That said and having gratified my ego with your kind indulgence, let me now turn to the real and objective topic of this article.

Recognizing the value of education as a credential for personal success and responsible citizenship, our Constitution provides in its Art. XIV, Sec. 1 that "the State shall protect and promote the right of all citizens to quality education at all levels and shall take appropriate steps to make such education accessible to all."

Yet, the alarming cost of present-day education in this country has made it a closed book to many citizens with native talents but little wherewithal to sharpen them with formal schooling.

Public schools do not cost much but are not generally regarded as efficient, except some state universities, notably the University of the Philippines. The UP represents the exception to the rule accepted before the Pacific War that the public schools were better than the private schools. Now the opposite is true. Public schools are no match for the private schools in the quality of education they offer and the facilities available to their students, like air-conditioned classrooms, well-stocked libraries, computers and laboratory equipment, along with better-paid and presumably more competent teachers. There is also the haughty attitude that enrollment in the public schools reveals financial limitations that some proud parents are reluctant to admit.

As a result, many middle-income parents are constrained to enroll their children in schools requiring tuition and other fees they can hardly afford. These fees run into the hundreds of thousands per schoolyear, and there are also the P100,000 bonds some schools demand as an additional price for acceptance. These bonds are reimbursable after the student's graduation or transfer but without interest for their use by the school in the meantime. The poor parents have to bite the bullet, to be consoled only by the award to their children of those lovely loyalty medals.

Congress should look into the excessive financial requirements of these so-called exclusive schools, which are open only to students whose parents have to pay through the nose for their children's benefit. Identification with these snobbish schools is also regarded as a foolish status symbol. The real beneficiaries of this heartless educational system are the schools themselves whose cupidity disdains the social values they are supposed to teach.

Significantly, the unconscionable tuition fees begin at the nursery, preparatory and kindergarten courses, completion of which is required for admission to grade school. This seems to me to be another form of educational blackmail. During our time, we began our studies in Grade 1, without all this kindergarten stuff, and we didn't do so bad either going through high school and college.

Solita Collas-Monsod

consequences across the Muslim world and beyond, persuaded the US government that it should look elsewhere for a major Gulf oil exporter with whom to make a strategic partnership.

"And yes, Mr. Coelho, oil security does matter—not just to Texan drivers of sports utility vehicles (SUVs). A sustainable low-carbon economy (wind turbines, nuclear fusion technologies, hydrogen combustion/fuel cell engines) that could power the world economy is still decades away. In the interim, the US and its partners need a stable and secure source of oil.

"Mr. Coelho, I need not remind a writer of your great learning of the 1930s, another decade when desperate economic circumstances provoked extreme and terrible political solutions. But would those in whose name you claim to speak—the excluded, impoverished and marginalized majority of the world—benefit one iota from a repeat?

"With all this in mind, Mr. Coelho, I would like to invoke the example of a predecessor whose literary eminence is almost as stellar as your own, the author of that century-old letter of accusation: Emile Zola.

"J'accuse! The American people, from the Republican party, the state of Florida electoral officials, to their US Supreme Court, of irresponsibility in allowing the flawed and inexperienced George W. Bush to hold the most important office in the world. By permitting this very average man to hold high office, you have lost the chance to convince a skeptical world that regime change in Iraq will benefit everyone not blinded by hatred and prejudice. You have turned the United States of America from the indispensable to the unbearable nation.

"J'accuse! Jacques Chirac and Gerhard Schröder of wrecking any hope for a multilateral solution to the Iraq crisis. Your populist anti-war stance comforts those wishing to turn back American global domination; but it offers no credible insight whatsoever into the clear and urgent challenges that the post-9/11 world faces. Moreover, by ignoring completely the 20 million Iraqi people who pray every night for their long nightmare to end, you betray yourselves as visionless and morally bankrupt. The world will not forget your attempt to build a common European foreign policy, on the back of the Iraqi people's endless suffering.

"J'accuse! You, Mr. Paulo Coelho, of touting cheap emotion and unthinking prejudice as reasoned analysis. Your self-satisfied pandering to the worst anti-American prejudices leaves your readers with a weaker understanding of the world we all must shape. Your letter is therefore, an act of gross irresponsibility.

"There are many, reasonable reasons to support regime change in Iraq. They remain ignored in your cosmically indulgent letter. If George W. Bush is maligned for trying where others dare not, his failure to convince is more than matched by your utter refusal to listen.

"Mr. Coelho, your masterpiece 'The Alchemist' tells the story of a lone boy's long journey, full of pitfalls and difficult decisions, to discover his destiny. Is there not the merest trace of awareness in your cavernous mind, Mr. Coelho, that this describes too the target of your scorn?

"War is terrible, Mr. Coelho, and it is also a sign of humanity that President Bush's decision to wage war in Iraq feels bad to everyone. But as another literary giant who stands almost as tall as you, Mark Twain, once remarked: 'We all do no end of feeling, and we mistake it for thinking.'

"To confuse your fine feelings with thinking, Mr. Coelho, is doing your deep mind a great disservice.

"Yours respectfully,
"James Hamilton"

Exciting Roro concept

THE OPENING of President Macapagal-Arroyo's roll-on, roll-off (Roro) "Strong Republic Nautical Highway" (SRNH) is an exciting concept which could very well be her major legacy to the nation. I followed in the media the trip GMA made over the past week from Manila through the Visayas and Mindanao, to dramatize the fruits of the EO she recently signed to liberalize the Roro. I must say that what government PR people term the "highways of the sea" and the "moving bridges concept" is something that could revolutionize not just business and agriculture in our island provinces, but also domestic tourism.

I discussed this concept with Neda Director General Romy Neri and he pointed out that it will minimize the handling expenses and time travel for goods, resulting in reduced prices for consumers. This is because there will be less need for loading the goods on and off barges, as cargo trucks themselves can get on the Roro. Neri said the biggest beneficiaries will be our island provinces. Preliminary reports indicate that cement costs have gone down in Iloilo while businessmen are happy that they don't need to keep big inventories anymore.

Full-page advertisements in the papers showed the Roro rates for passengers traveling in air-con buses and Roro boats or in their own vehicles from Luzon to the Visayas, or for rolling cargo (alas, the ads forgot to indicate phone numbers where inquiries could be made), and schedules of departures to and from Manila and the Visayas. Thus, it is now possible for a whole group to travel in their van from Manila to Caticlan, the jump-off point to fabled Boracay. This is via Batangas City's port where they can load their car on the Roro to Calapan, Mindoro, drive down to Roxas town at Mindoro's tip and then get on the Roro again to Caticlan, where they can catch the boat to Boracay, or proceed to Iloilo. Travelers, however, have to be assured safe parking areas for their vehicles in Caticlan and security in some sensitive areas of Mindoro. But the possibilities are enormous for tourism and I myself would like to join a caravan this summer.

POLITICAL TIDBITS

Sen. Panfilo Lacson's lawyer, Philip Sigfrid Portun, wrote to clarify issues raised in this column last April 3. I wrote that the April 1, 2003 Supreme Court Resolution did not actually "reverse" its May 28, 2002 decision as the latter never declared that Lacson and his men could not be prosecuted anymore. Portun opined that the SC's May 28 ruling said it could not rule on the retroactive effect of Section 8, Rule 117 on whether the required notices (to offended parties) were complied with, for lack of sufficient factual bases, leaving that determination to the trial court. He also stressed that the SC held that the dismissal of the cases against Lacson bore his express consent as it was he himself who moved to dismiss them for lack of probable cause.

But he asserted that the SC "expressly and clearly reversed" itself when it declared that it had indeed found factual basis for concluding that Section 8, Rule 117 could not be applied retroactively in Lacson's case and that the records clearly show the lack of the required notices; it also pronounced that Lacson "did not expressly consent to the dismissal of the cases against him, thus he could not invoke the new rule in his favor."

Former Senate President Jovito Salonga, analyzing the recent decision and separate opinions in the April issue of Kilosbayan Magazine, labeled as "inaccurate" the contention of Lacson and his lawyers that the May 28 ruling had already decided by a 13-0 vote that the criminal cases for murder against him could no longer be revived due to the lapse of the two-year period. To buttress his argument, Salonga cited a critical passage in the May 28 ruling penned by Justice Reynato Puno (who became the lead dissenter in the April 1 ruling) which said: "The records of this case are inconclusive on the factual issue of whether the multiple murder cases against Lacson are being revived within or beyond the 2-year bar."

Salonga also countered the criticism against the ponente in the April 2 ruling, Justice Romeo Callejo. He was being criticized for disqualifying himself in the Court of Appeals deliberations on the Lacson case because his nephew-in-law, Jaime Caringal of the PNP intelligence group, had helped investigate the case against Lacson, and then "reversing" himself in the Supreme Court (he not only did not inhibit himself, he became the ponente of the SC decision overruling the CA). Salonga said that while this criticism came from outside the Court, "none of his SC colleagues had the gall or the temerity" to even hint that he should inhibit himself. Salonga said Callejo wrote his SC colleagues that his review of SC records did not yield anything that indicated that Caringal was involved in any investigation of the criminal complaint against Lacson. Thus, he saw no need to inhibit himself, and in fact, he felt he "would be recanting in the performance of my duties as a member of the Court" if he were to do so.

Salonga also praised Callejo's 29-page majority opinion as "remarkable for its lucidity, its use of simple, basic English, and its common-sense interpretation of what the law is, in light of its reason and purpose." He noted that while other judges may prefer "long-winded, grandiloquent language to express a simple thought," Callejo used "simple words to convey a clearer thought and a deeper meaning." I agree that any writer, be he a judge, lawyer, functionary or journalist, should write principally to be understood, but unfortunately many write to impress, which is not impressive at all.

AT LARGE

dubbed a "Superwoman" for walking for five straight days from her village of Takepan in Pikit to the evacuation center, surviving on food she foraged along the way. Bai, 51, has seven children and with them has survived two previous evacuations, one of which required her to live for two years in a center.

One would expect her harsh life to have turned Bai cynical and bitter. Instead, she opens graciously to whoever sits down beside her and asks her to talk about her life. And her "take" on their session with the President in Malacañang is refreshing for its candor and naiveté.

"Maganda naman ang reception niya sa amin (She received us warmly enough)," Bai says of the President's welcome. Her impression of GMA is of a strict-laced authoritarian, "stricta kayo (very strict)," unsimiling and not very conducive to a heart-to-heart dialogue. But this impression was soon revised after four of their representatives were allowed to speak their minds and tell their stories. "My God, nahirapan pala kayo, kawawa pala kayo (so you had a hard time, you really suffered)," Bai recalls the President exclaiming. "Na-touch naman siya (She was touched)," Bai says appreciatively of the President's reaction. (Though I had to wonder how the President could not have known of the suffering and sorrow to be reaped by civilians in the wake of the assault against the MILF).

BAI can remember only one instance when the President revealed her vaunted temper, when GMA raised her eyebrows and her voice as she requested the media to leave the room so she could freely dialogue with the bakwits.

Bai says she and the others were concerned about this, because, as they presented their urgent requests for food, medicines, clothes and temporary livelihoods at the evacuation centers, the President would immediately turn to her Cabinet members or staff around her and issue instructions. "But how could we be sure that these orders would be followed, if the media were not around to record them?"

Aside from meeting with the President and Reyes, the bakwit delegation also met with Vice President Teofisto Guingona, Social Welfare Secretary Dinky Soliman and National Anti-Poverty Commission Secretary Ging Quinsos Deles, Sen. Loren Legarda, church and civic leaders, peace groups and students, and country directors of foreign funding agencies.

I met Bai, Muslims and the other bakwits at the "Solidarity Night: Women Leaders of NCR Meet the Women of the Bakwit Mission" sponsored by Pilipina. At once, it was evident that the differences between us, including our faiths, our lifestyles and our expectations, counted for nothing beside everything else we had in common: being women, wives, mothers, daughters and grandmothers.

LISA Ugay and Mary Ann Arnado, who accompanied the bakwits as they made the round of meetings and press conferences, confided how these simple folk were blown away by the wonders of the big city, since many of them were in Manila for the first time.

"They were awed by our overpasses," says Mary Ann. "They asked us why there were bridges over places where there was no water. They were also quite thrilled to see and ride over what they called 'two-story' highways."

If we have learned much from the bakwits about the realities of war in Central Mindanao, then they also learned in their eight days in the city that peace is but a prelude to the work of bridging the distance between life in the big city and in rural areas, between rich and poor Filipinos.

A matter of faith

I HAVE often wondered about the disturbing gap between the rich and the poor and the unfairness of life in general. I have asked myself why God allows this to happen.

When I was younger, these questions were simply overwhelming. But as I grew older, I learned to face reality without asking too many questions. I just told myself that was what life is and hung on to my faith in God.

Growing up with my family has enriched me more than what I learned in school. With my family, I have learned to value life despite the obstacles. We have managed to sail rather smoothly through hardships and pain, unlike many who seem not to have found the true meaning of life.

YOUNG BLOOD

Rachel Gravador

We want to know what the young are thinking about. What are their thoughts on current issues? We welcome contributions from the twentysomething and below.—Ed.

Through my family, I see beauty in everyday life: the wind that brushes my hair, the sun that kisses me hello, the magnificent moon and her array of stars, the smiles of people around me. I have experienced the joy and hope brought by the touch of God's hand in the wonders of His creation.

Life for us has always been simple because we only have basic needs and simple wants. Because of this, I have learned the essence of character.

I can still remember the many difficult and trying years my family endured. My mom was pregnant when my father, a civil engineer, could not get any construction project. We felt miserable. We had to give up our little pleasures, including a P1 increase in our daily allowance. There was not enough food on the table, and mom had to bear the humiliation of borrowing money from relatives.

When mom finally gave birth, the burden became heavier. The baby needed a lot of things. Although I quietly resented the fact that the baby's need came first, I tried to understand the situation. Saving half of our P2 allowance, my siblings and I were able to contribute to the needs of our family.

Regardless of the sacrifices we had to make, we still managed to smile and to find joy in simple things. Instead of watching movies or renting a Betamax tape, we had fun by telling jokes and playing games. Instead of going to restaurants, we enjoyed any food prepared by mom. If we had any complaints, we kept them within ourselves.

Our problems continued when I was in high school. Worse, I had to put up with peer pressure and jealousies as well as go through an identity crisis. I often caught myself daydreaming and wishing that things were different.

All these problems, however, could not kill my spirit. I tried to enjoy my teenage days. I joined different school organizations and was even the features editor of our school paper. I participated in various competitions.

My only regret was not being able to take dance lessons at Dance Arts, where all my friends were enrolled. My family couldn't afford it. So every time my friends had their annual dance concert, I would just watch them from the bleachers and imagine myself being part of the show.

College life was even more difficult. But the scholarship that I got lightened the load somewhat.

Then tragedy struck. During my third year in college, fire hit our neighborhood, leaving more than 40 families homeless, including our own. I hardly bothered to ask who or what caused the fire. All I could think of was where we would live.

We went to church the next day and I blamed myself for not being religious or prayerful enough. I felt guilty that I wasn't having conversations with God often enough. I thought that would have helped us a lot.

I decided to stop my studies and give up my dream of becoming an English teacher so that I could find a job. My father patiently explained to me that God had a reason for taking away our house, that this challenge should bring me closer to my Creator, and that, instead of questioning His plans my faith in Him should be strong.

I was stunned by the realization of how little my faith was. I seemed to have forgotten about the existence of the Almighty. I had become blind to the beauty of His creation, to His compassion and love. I was engrossed with my own miseries. I could not see the light in that very dark night until my father told me to look for it.

That was the last time I complained about our life. I wrote my term papers under the light of an emergency lamp, saved half of my P10 allowance for our immediate needs collected used clothing from my classmates and gave them away to our homeless neighbors who were living in a public elementary school. Looking at our neighbors, I realized how blessed we were for our family was able to save a lot of things before our house burned down.

It took two long months before our house was rebuilt and we could live there again.

During our final year in college, a teacher asked the class if we ever felt poverty in our midst, in our own families. She asked us to raise our hands if we did. All my classmates raised their hands, but I didn't. I couldn't.

Everyone looked questioningly at me, but no one bothered to ask why I didn't raise my hand. I overheard someone murmur that I must have been born rich.

Rich? Yes, rich because I had my treasures: my family and the faith they instilled in me.

I told my father about my teacher's question and he enumerated all the troubles our family had gone through. I looked at my father straight in the eye and said: "Poverty is not being deprived of the many things the rich enjoy. It transcends physical, emotional and financial needs. Poverty only exists if man loses faith in God."

I wasn't sure if I was right. But I was quite certain that in every crisis we went through, someone powerful was watching over us because we never gave up on Him. We never lost our faith and our trust in Him.

Two years after I graduated, my family moved to our new house. My father had purchased four lots in a subdivision designed our house and built it for us.

Things had truly changed. We had our own cellular phones, personal computers, even cars.

I often look back at the years when trial after daily trial molded the character of every member of our family, and wonder at God's magnificent plans. My mind can only think of the joy His love has brought us. Life had been really tough for us, and yet my family was able to overcome the hardships. What made us strong was our faith in Him. The very difficult times we had were blessings in disguise. They strengthened our faith.

I'm truly glad that God gave us crosses, for now we know that He gives no cross we cannot carry.

1901 Report of the Taft Commission

IN ITS last report, the Taft Commission noted that a great majority of people were ignorant, superstitious and "incapable of understanding any government but that of absolutism." The majority were not war-like but submissive and easily (too easily, it seems) "controlled by the educated among them, and the power of an educated... willing to plot and use all the arts of a demagogue in rousing the people, is quite dangerous."

The educated, though full of phrases concerning liberty, actually had only a faint conception of what it was "and the mutual self-restraint which is involved in its maintenance. Divisions of government were not easily understood nor the limitations of power." This was due to the fact that during the Spanish regime the friar and the president were in control and there was no limit to the exercise of their authority. The Americans found that in the municipalities the people at the helm failed to observe the limits of their power and the populace too submissive to oppose them.

As a result, the commission felt that the electorate should be limited to those who could speak, write or read English or Spanish, or had served in the municipio as an officer, or was a taxpayer. (The payment of $15 for a permit to operate a bar was not included.) The suggestion came from Filipinos themselves, with some even advocating that voters should have higher education credentials. The Americans, on the other hand, thought that with the establishment of public education the electorate would grow larger with time. (Granted the view is elitist, still you can't help but wonder whether our politicians would have allowed the proliferation of so-called informal settlers if they had nothing to gain.)

What the commission felt to be a priority was to emphasize to the educated in the community that power had limits, an idea that was "so difficult for them to understand." The Americans also observed "an absolute lack of any sense of responsibility on the part of a public officer to the public at large. Public office it seems had always been regarded as a source of private profit and a means of gratifying private desires, either hate or friendship." It was felt that two generations of being closely monitored would result in forming "a nucleus of Filipinos, earnest, intelligent, patriotic, who will become familiar with practical, free government and civil liberty." (Looks like they were too optimistic.)

We were seen as bright and quick and anxious to learn as well as ambitious. But we lacked persistence and power of application, but it was also the opinion of the commission that we were not ready to "establish a government which would hold together for any length of time." In a short while it would express or evince "all the oppression and all the evils which were known in Spanish times."

In the meantime war raged in the provinces. About 400 "insurgents" were routed in Batangas and 50,000 pounds of rice captured. In Subotom, Samar, near Basey, Major Waller reported that his men attacked a rebel stronghold. They destroyed three camps, captured 40 bamboo cannons and destroyed a big quantity of rice and other food supplies. The strongholds were nearly impregnable. "The trails leading to it were lined with poisoned spears sticking up from the ground, and were filled with hidden pitfalls. Major Waller's command attacked the enemy unexpectedly. To do this, they had to scale a cliff 200 feet high. They climbed barefoot, over bamboo ladders. At the top, they found boulders piled up, ready to be precipitated upon an attacking party."

Details about the Samar campaign are not widely known. There were no wholesale surrenders but those captured showed evidence of suffering and hunger. The coasts were being closely patrolled by gunboats using search lights so that it was impossible to land food. The gunboats seized $20,000 and confiscated $100,000 worth of hemp. Insurgent leader Luchan gave a 2-percent tax (money he apparently got from the people) to the local president who collected the majority of the island's revenues.

In Laguna the insurgent leader was Caballos who had 500 fully armed men under him. A military commission advised the hanging of another insurgent leader, Isidoro Torres, for ordering the assassination of an American corporal. General Chaffee disapproved the order and instead released Torres. The roads from Batangas and Laguna provinces were lined with a continuous stream of men, women and children, seeking refuge from the horrors of war.

General Bell believed that the best peace method was "rigorous warfare until the insurrection is completely subdued." Arrest of members of the Lopez family in Batangas, confiscation of their steamers and rice and the arrest of members of the clergy who were believed to be "instigators of the insurgents," did much to stem the tide of opposition to the Americans.

Considered an important capture in Laguna was that of Agueda Kahabagan. She commanded an insurgent force of 800 men, 300 of whom carried rifles while the rest were armed with bolos. For six years she had been leading insurgent bands against Spaniards and Americans.

Major Lot and three Filipino lieutenants with 10 rifles, 3 revolvers and 24 bolos surrendered to Major Anderson in Lipa. Lot was very much hated in the area, having looted $55,000 worth of jewelry from prominent families.

Different group should run Meralco

MERALCO is putting salt on open wounds when it sends bills with a message on the reverse side proclaiming that it has been part of the consumer's life for 100 years.

Actually it has only been 50 years since Meralco became a Filipino corporation under the leadership of the late Eugenio Lopez Sr. and only over a decade since it started saddling their hapless power consumers with the curse of the purchased power adjustment.

The PPA materialized from an unfortunate situation, which was not at all the creation of Meralco, but if the figures of former Sen.

Juan Ponce Enrile are to be believed, the Lopez conglomerate which owns minority common stock and manages Meralco, has made Meralco a virtual milking cow at the expense of its captive customers in its franchise area. The method employed is quite straightforward: sweetheart deals are made between Meralco, whose profits are protected and restricted under its franchise, and other Lopez conglomerate corporations not covered by profit restrictions (like its IPPs and ABS-CBN). The rip-off is so transparent that one wonders why there is no law or Security Exchange Commission regulation that prevents this. But then, as we may have seen in the passage of the Epira Law and the Meralco mega-franchise, we cannot expect protection from our legislators when public interest clashes with big business.

It may be time to remove from the Lopez group the management of Meralco and transfer it to an appropriate government-supervised authority. Notorious as the government may be in administering business concerns, professional managers under constant audit by the government would be preferable to a vested interest group beyond government control. We have made all the mistakes in the choice of executives for Napocor, it is about time we learned our lesson and picked a worthy group to run Meralco.

France has helped the US, too

I WOULD like to react to the letter last March 19 of Norman Peskin, an American veteran of World War II who served in Europe and fought the Nazis to liberate France.

Peskin should not begrudge France's taking a position against the United States in the current controversy pertaining to Iraq. It may interest him to know that in the United States itself, many Americans are not in favor of the war against Iraq. US superiority in weaponry is not an assurance of victory. I hope the United States wins this war but there is a possibility that it will lose this war not in the war front but in the home front. With public opinion mounting against the war, Iraq might become a quagmire for the United States.

It is true that the United States helped in the liberation of France against the Germans in both World War I and II. But France also helped the Americans when the latter fought against the British during the American Revolution (1775-1783) and in the War for American Independence (1812-1814), better known as the War of 1812.

Many nations, the Philippines included, owe a lot to France. The principles of liberty, equality and fraternity, which were made popular during the French Revolution, were transplanted to Philippine soil and other lands thirsting for freedom and democracy. The French Revolution was an inspiration to our hero, the Great Plebeian Andres Bonifacio, who founded the Katipunan and whose avowed aim was the overthrow of the Spanish colonial regime in the Philippines. The Philippine Revolution in 1896 resulted in the birth of the Philippine Republic in Malolos which was the first republic in Asia.

We also remember that during the 1986 People Power Revolution, which installed Corason Aquino as the new president (replacing the dictator Ferdinand Marcos), France was the very first country to extend recognition to the new government. Other countries, including the United States, the United Kingdom and Russia, followed France.

I cannot join the call for a boycott of French products simply because France did not join the coalition led by the United States. My wife likes French perfume. I like French wine. And the French women, next to the Filipina, are among the world's loveliest.

With my wife and children, I was privileged to have visited France a few years ago and enjoyed the hospitality of the French in various religious and historic sites such as Lourdes and Paris. I, therefore, offer a toast to that country and say, "Vive le France."

We fought common enemies. CAN WE ALSO SHARE COMMON MEMORIES?

For over a hundred years, the Philippines and the United States stood side by side in brotherhood and friendship.

It is a bond that began in strife. Over a century ago, the two countries fought each other in a bloody war that some historians called "the first Vietnam."

The war ended honorably with the two armies putting aside their arms and agreeing to inaugurate a new era of amity by settling each others' claims.

For us, one such claim is the return of two church bells in the town of Balangiga, Province of Samar, in the Central Philippines.

The bells were seized as war trophies by American soldiers and brought to the U.S. as souvenirs of the campaign.

The bells now hang above the gates of the F.E. Warren Air Force Base outside Cheyenne, Wyoming. It is said that the officers and men at the base, as well as the people of Cheyenne, take great pride in the bells.

For decades, the Philippine government and Filipino veterans organizations in Manila have repeatedly asked the US Federal Government, the US Department of Defense and the State Government of Wyoming to return the bells.

Our cause is clear: The Balangiga Bells are an important part of Philippine history. They are a tribute to the valor of Filipino soldiers. They symbolize the great Catholic Faith that holds sway over 70 million Filipinos.

US authorities—particularly the leadership at the base and the residents of Cheyenne—have refused, explaining that they have a right to the bells and that these treasures were also paid for in American blood.

Keeping the bells as war booty, however, threatens to reopen the wounds of the Filipino-American War of 1899-1906. They engender enmity in a relationship that needs to grow in strength.

Keeping the bells as spoils of war strains a friendship forged by Filipino soldiers and American troops in the great battles they fought together: the Second World War, the Korean War and the War in Vietnam.

As war booty, the bells symbolize the arrogance of power and the insolence of victory. As spoils of war, they celebrate the might of bayonets and the privilege of conquerors.

Returning the bells however will honor the sacrifices made by our two peoples in war and peace.

Returned to their original home, the bells will peal in celebration of friendship, magnanimity and hope.

They will sing aloud the values that have unified Filipinos and Americans for decades: the ideals of freedom, democracy and equality.

It is time to return the Bells of Balangiga to the Philippines.

It is the right thing to do.

Willing, not volunteering, to defend Lacson

IN THE APRIL 8 issue of the INQUIRER, there appeared a news item titled, "Top lawyers offer to defend Lacson." My name was among those mentioned to have volunteered to defend Sen. Panfilo Lacson in the Kuratong Baleleng cases.

Please be informed that I never volunteered my services at anytime, directly or indirectly. In all of my 46 years of actively practicing my profession, I have never volunteered to represent prominent or well-to-do personalities, only those who are oppressed and indigent. I do not intend to make any exception now. If requested, however, why not?

Making anti-poverty programs really work

RECENTLY, President Macapagal-Arroyo said the $100 million the Philippines received (or is expected to receive) from Washington would be used to address poverty in Muslim Mindanao, implying that poverty must be dealt with to pave the way for an abiding peace in the region.

This was not the first time Ms Macapagal perceived a correlation between poverty, on the one hand, and insurgency, terrorism and criminality, on the other. When she visited President Bush in Washington—and repeatedly in several subsequent meetings—she underscored that correlation.

But why has not her administration taken concrete and decisive steps to deal with insurgency, terrorism and criminality through programs of action designed meaningfully to reduce poverty? When they faced rising peasant unrest, instead of concentrating on beefing up military muscle, Presidents Quirino and Magsaysay set in motion agrarian, labor and economic policy reforms, thus winning back the people's confidence. Ferdinand Marcos used more carrot than violence to keep the NPA at bay.

The flagship projects of the Macapagal administration—Epira, SPAV, Securitization, Transco, Cha-Cha, Nara and other measures concocted by Agile—are all meant to benefit transnational corporations and their local satraps.

The projects directed to the majority of Filipinos are all repressive: the curfew hours, the national ID system, secret marshals, warrantless arrests, the anti-terrorism bill, the war against the NPA, support for Bush's war, state of lawless violence, AFP-PNP crackdowns, Mayor Duterte's vigilantes and Senator Biazon's Caguis, etc.

In fact, in the 2003 budget, only the police and the Armed Forces received additional appropriations, as if repressive muscle can be solely relied upon to maintain peace and order. The allocations for education, health and other social services were all pruned.

What Filipinos are waiting for are concrete and decisive programs which positively demonstrate a sustained and mounting commitment to social justice and compassion—programs to assist the poor, the hungry, the unemployed, the sick and the out-of-school who now constitute the vast majority of the nation.

World greets Saddam fall with relief, unease, anger

LONDON—Concerns about Iraq's future and where the United States might next unleash its awesome military might tempered widespread relief on Thursday that Saddam Hussein's grip had fallen away so easily.

His 24-year reign appeared to have ended on Wednesday when US troops swept into the heart of Baghdad and jubilant Iraqis danced on a toppled statue of their ousted leader.

But relief in many countries that Baghdad had fallen without a bloodbath mingled with mistrust of the United States in parts of Europe and Asia, shock and anger across the Middle East, and barely concealed satisfaction in Israel.

Some wondered whether President George W. Bush, emboldened by military success, would turn his attention to other nations Washington has accused of pursuing weapons of mass destruction.

Syria, Iran and Libya have all drawn US censure, along with North Korea.

The New York Times said the collapse of government authority in Baghdad "constitutes the high-water mark for a new American determination to use the nation's military might to project its power around the world."

Prince Hassan of Jordan told the BBC: "There are jitters throughout the region about the possibility of (US) threats to Syria and possibly Iran resulting in the domino effect."

That view was echoed even in Britain, the United States' staunchest European ally and its partner in the Iraq war.

"This unprecedented show of US offensive power sends a daunting message. Who knows which way the Abrams tank barrels will swivel next?" the left-leaning Guardian newspaper asked.

Israeli Defense Minister Shaul

Mofaz hammered home his government's wish that the US-led war on Iraq would not only eliminate one of Israel's sworn enemies but also chasten Palestinian militants into laying down their arms.

"I hope that in the era after the toppling of Saddam Hussein's regime, the Palestinians will understand that the world has changed," he told reporters.

France, a vociferous opponent of the conflict, said "bravo" to the end of the war and fall of Saddam Hussein.

A statement issued in the name of President Jacques Chirac said: "France, like every democracy, welcomes the fall of Saddam Hussein's dictatorship, and hopes there will be a rapid and effective end to the fighting."

But presidential aide Alain Juppe struck at the heart of Washington's justification for its actions, adding: "We were right to say that there were other ways to disarm Iraq. Iraq did not use weapons of mass destruction."

Another opponent of war, German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder, welcomed the victory of US-led forces but said Germany would work to rebuild Iraq only under UN leadership.

Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi, who backed Washington over Iraq, said he was pleased the war was over with fewer casualties than feared. An aide of the Pope, who opposed the war, said: "It's a relief, naturally we are all happy."

Many Arabs felt let down by the demise of a figure who had represented a rare source of Arab defiance of American power; others were more shocked by his own people's failure to defend or mourn him, and saw a warning to other unelected Arab rulers.

"It's a day of shame," said Ali Jadidah, an engineer in the Palestinian city of Ramallah. "On this day, Arabs have become slaves. The only man who dared to say 'no' to the Americans' face has vanished today. What is left is a bunch of bowing and scraping Arab leaders." Ahmed Abdel-Rahman, an aide to Palestinian President Yasser Arafat, insisted the Palestinians would not be cowed by Saddam's defeat or Mofaz's words.

"The Palestinian leadership is committed to international legitimacy and to the right of the Palestinian people to resist occupation," he said.

STOP U.S. WARS OF AGGRESSION!

WE, ARTISTS, WRITERS, AND CULTURAL WORKERS, denounce the Bush government and its coalition's invasion of Iraq; the damages that this illegal, immoral, and inhuman war have so far inflicted on civilians, specially women and children; and the irreparable destruction it has wrought on historic sites of our world's common cultural heritage.

We reject President Macapagal-Arroyo's rabid support for this U.S.-led war of aggression, and her opening the use of our country and its resources for this purpose. Equally condemnable is the government's exaltation on the prospects of profits for the reconstruction of a purposely-inflicted devastation.

As this so-called "war on terror" of the U.S. has reached Philippine soil, we oppose the Balikatan (Joint US-Philippine Combat Operations), more of which are to be conducted this year in Mindanao. The entry and involvement of foreign military troops in our country is a brazen violation of the Philippine constitution. We fear that these armed operations are actually aimed at keeping Filipinos powerless to dark designs of a global hegemon.

We urge our countrymen not to be taken in by war propaganda, which can blind our eyes of mangled bodies; silence our ears to the moans of victims, and paralyze our minds into ignorant apathy.

We call on all artists, writers, and cultural workers to engage in a massive outburst of patriotic and peace-loving prose, poetry, music, imagery, and performance, as we link arms with our fellow world citizens to rebuff this war of aggression. Together, let us act and work for genuine freedom and justice—for a lasting peace.

Darkest war scenarios did not come to pass

By Deb Riechmann

WASHINGTON—War planners thought Iraq might fight with poison gas and germs. So far, it hasn't. US officials worried that hundreds of oil wells, instead of fewer than a dozen, would be set on fire. Israel braced for incoming missiles that never arrived.

From the start of the war, Saddam Hussein has been portrayed as a leader who would stop at nothing to keep his regime alive. Yet, as the war winds down, none of these darker scenarios has happened.

There have been no terrorist attacks on America. Iraq hasn't demolished holy sites and blamed the destruction on the West. And while Iraqi soldiers have disguised themselves as civilians, the Pentagon says there have been no reports, as initially predicted, of troops donning look-alike US and British uniforms to commit atrocities against Iraqis.

The United States and Britain might have overestimated the resolve of Iraq's leaders, military experts say. Or, the coalition might have rendered Iraqi troops impotent with a speedy roll to Baghdad. It's also possible that Saddam was incapable, for whatever reason, of being as ruthless as he's been depicted.

"I think Saddam is as evil as we thought, but we may have assumed that he had greater freedom of action than he actually did," said historian and retired Army Lt. Col. James Carafano.

An authoritarian regime, by definition, requires centralized control, he said. It's possible that the Iraqi leadership gave orders to torch oil wells, launch chemical weapons or fire missiles at Israel, but that the commands were ignored.

"At the end of World War II, Hitler was sitting in a bunker, moving around these divisions, vigorously defending Berlin," Carafano recalled. "Nobody had the guts to tell him: 'Those divisions have evaporated and the Russians are at the door.'"

"You might have had the same dynamic here."

Carafano said he's seen reports that suggest Saddam decided against pulling his Republican Guard divisions back into Baghdad because he feared a coup. Maybe he was just afraid to have them "too close to the throne," he said.

There are numerous reasons why Iraq didn't deploy chemical or biological weapons, military analysts say. Saddam's forces could no longer get to them, never had them, didn't want to give the coalition justification for the invasion, lacked the means to disperse them, or destroyed them when UN inspectors came looking.

Also, facing stiff counter fire from coalition forces, it's doubtful that Saddam would have been able to fire enough chemical weapons to make a difference, Carafano said.

"He could have maybe shot a couple of rounds, but not the thousands of rounds needed to accomplish anything," he said.

It's possible that the coalition troops rendered Saddam's troops incapable of using these kind of weapons.

Air power probably paralyzed any efforts to recover most such weapons and certainly destroyed many potential delivery systems," Anthony Cordesman, a military expert at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, said in a brief released Thursday that outlines the first lessons of the war.

Another fear was that Iraq would fire a barrage of missiles into neighboring Kuwait.

When the war began, civil defense sirens blared in Kuwait and televisions flashed "Danger, Danger." People ran into bomb shelters. Police went on the highest alert. Then the panic subsided.

Some of the 20 missiles Iraq fired at Kuwait fell harmlessly into the Persian Gulf or the desert, others were intercepted by Patriot missiles. Only one caused minor injuries when it landed in front of a Kuwaiti shopping center.

Israel feared a repeat of the first Gulf War when Iraq fired 39 Scud missiles, causing damage in Israel, but few casualties. Missile attacks against Israel may have been averted this time when special coalition forces seized two airfield complexes believed to house Scuds capable of reaching Israel.

THOUSANDS of people protest against the US-led war in Iraq April 10 by forming an anti-war symbol at Catalunya square in Barcelona.

Protesters focus on anti-occupation

WASHINGTON—Far from celebrating the presumed quick end to the war in Iraq, US peace activists say they are outraged at the prospect of a lengthy military occupation there and are gearing up for more protests.

Massive rallies had been planned across the United States and in major cities around the world this weekend to call for an end to the US-led war.

Now organizers say the rallying cry of the protests will be an end to the impending occupation of Iraq by coalition forces.

"It's more urgent and more important than ever that there be a mobilization," said Sara Flounders, co-director of the New York-based International Action Center who is helping to organize the demonstration.

She insisted that despite the fast-changing events in Iraq, this weekend's world-wide protest "is absolutely going forward—if anything with greater determination and greater clarity."

"Only now the focus is, 'No' to colonial occupation," said Flounders.

The weekend's protests are organized by the ANSWER coalition, a confederation of anti-war and social action groups that was a key organizer of many of the massive demonstrations held in the weeks before the start of the war.

Flounders said protests are planned in San Francisco, Washington and several other US cities and in some 40 countries including Britain, Italy, Japan and Korea.

The protesters, however, represent a minority view.

According to a new opinion poll by the Pew Research Center, 76 percent of Americans believe the United States made the right decision when it went to war with Iraq to bring down the government of Saddam Hussein and rid Baghdad of its suspected weapons of mass destruction.

Fifty-one percent said it would be necessary to kill or capture Saddam Hussein in order to be able to declare victory.

But peace activists remain undaunted. Some said they will continue to protest lest Iraq be just a first US conquest, to be followed by other states whose governments Washington disapproves of.

Other organizers say they are pushing for the United Nations to take the lead in the post-war reconstruction of Iraq. AFP

LA shaken by arrest of socialite 'Chinese spy'

LOS ANGELES—For years she was a society hostess, a prominent Chinese-American who hobnobbed with politicians, presidents and millionaires.

But on Thursday Katrina Leung was behind bars and Los Angeles was buzzing with news that she had been charged with being a double agent who passed classified national security information to China obtained during a secret 20-year love affair with her FBI handler.

Leung, 49, was jailed pending a hearing next week and her FBI handler, James Smith, now retired, was released on bail on charges of gross negligence for allegedly al-

"There is not a lot of spy intrigue in Los Angeles politics, so people are absolutely shocked at this," a city hall insider said. "I think the ripple effects of her arrest have not yet been fully understood."

Both Leung and Smith were arrested on Wednesday after a year-long investigation. The information Leung is alleged to have passed to China included details on FBI personnel, phone lists and intelligence on the whereabouts of Chinese fugitives.

Leung, who runs a business consultancy and a bookstore, had a vast network of contacts, serving as a director of the influential Los Angeles World Affairs Council, as secretary of the National Association of Chinese Americans. She also helped organize banquets and functions for Chinese dignitaries including one for then-Premier Zhu Rongji during a visit in 1999.

"We were as surprised and shocked as anyone when the news broke regarding Ms. Leung. Ms. Leung has been a community activist for many years but has served as a volunteer board member of the Council for only three months," said J. Curtis Mack, president of the Los Angeles World Affairs Council.

She was an activist for former Republican Mayor Richard Riordan, accompanying him on a 1998 trip to China, and a fund-raiser for California's Republican 2002 gubernatorial candidate Bill Simon.

Simon, in a campaign speech last year, called Leung an "old and dear friend," according to a published transcript. Simon could not be reached for comment on Thursday.

Leung was also the president emerita of the Los Angeles-Guangzhou Sister City Organization and took part in an international trade forum in Hong Kong in December last year. Reuters

Nato troops nab ex-Bosnian Muslim commander

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina—Nato-led peacekeepers in Bosnia have arrested Naser Oric, a Bosnian Muslim wanted by the UN war-crimes tribunal in The Hague, Nato in Bosnia said Friday.

Oric, 35, was the wartime army commander in the eastern Bosnian town of Srebrenica, where the worst massacre of civilian Muslims during the 1992-1995 Bosnian war occurred. He was arrested late Thursday.

However, Oric, who was in charge of the defense of the Muslim enclave of Srebrenica from Bosnian Serb forces during the war, is accused of war crimes against Serbs. The Muslims have been seen so far as the only war victims in Srebrenica.

The tribunal in The Hague charged Oric with "violations of the Law and Customs of War, (including) murder, cruel treatment, wanton destruction and plunder," said a statement issued by the Nato-led peacekeepers in Bosnia, known by their acronym SFOR.

He is to be transferred to the Netherlands soon, said prosecution spokeswoman Florence Hartmann from The Hague. Netherlands Oric was indicted secretly, enabling authorities to make a surprise arrest.

According to witnesses, Oric was about to enter the building in which he lives in the northern Bosnian city of Tuzla when several cars, including two vans, surrounded him and about a dozen men in civilian clothes jumped out and forced him to lie on the ground.

Oric was then quickly pushed into a van and driven away. Neighbors who watched the action said the entire operation lasted less than two minutes. SFOR helicopters hovered over the neighborhood during the operation. AP

Castro moles tracked dissidents' movements

HAVANA—US efforts to back opponents of Cuba's communist government were so heavily infiltrated by undercover agents that some had passes to the American diplomatic mission, Cuban officials said on Wednesday.

Opponents of President Fidel Castro said they always suspected some of their colleagues were spies but were surprised at the large number—12—who surfaced as witnesses at last week's trial of 75 dissidents.

The biggest surprise was Aleda Godínez, alias Agent Vilma, who worked as the secretary of Martha Beatriz Roque, a dissident economist supported by US diplomats in Havana.

Roque received a 20-year prison sentence.

"She (Vilma) did us a lot of damage. She had access to the finances and the archives and handed everything over to the government," said veteran human rights activist E. Zardo Sánchez.

Dissidents were given prison sentences of up to 28 years for treason in the trials that were condemned for their severity by foreign governments and international rights organizations. Cuba accused the United States of violating diplomatic conventions in its efforts to subvert Castro, in power since a 1959 revolution.

Cuban Foreign Minister Felipe Pérez Roque showed videotaped testimony of two undercover agents at a news conference on Wednesday where he accused the Bush administration of turning its diplomatic mission in Havana into the headquarters of the island's small opposition movement.

"I'm an agent. Agent Tania of the Ministry of Interior," Odalis Collazo, known as the leader of the Pro Human Rights Party of Cuba, said in testimony taped during the trial of a dissident.

She said she supplied the US diplomatic mission with reports on human rights abuses in Cuba.

Alleged journalist Nestor Baguer, otherwise known as Agent Ocravio, who had worked for Cuba's security police since 1960, said he visited the US Interest Section so frequently he had a special pass allowing him entry on any day.

Baguer, 72, said he was asked by US diplomats to write about power outages and food and gasoline shortages in Cuba for independent Cuban media published in the United States on the Internet.

On March 14, he attended a meeting of 34 dissident journalists in the residence of the top American diplomat in Havana, James Cason, and was asked to head a workshop on ethics in journalism, he said.

Baguer said US diplomats gave tape recorders, shortwave radios and digital cameras to independent reporters who were paid from the United States by using a Canadian bank debit card called Transcard.

"They would tell the journalists what subjects interested them," he said. "The majority of the journalists are mercenaries that spend their time slandering Cuba."

Another undercover agent, Manuel David Orrio, or Agent Miguel, organized the journalists meeting at Cason's residence and invited foreign correspondents to attend by calling them on the cellular phone of a US diplomat. Reuters

'Murdered' girl back from dead

CANBERRA—Whodunnit? No-body.

Australian teenager Natasha Ryan, who disappeared four years ago and was presumed dead, has resurfaced—midway through the trial of her alleged murderer.

Ryan, 18, was found Thursday, living with her boyfriend in a house just one kilometer (half a mile) from her mother's home in the coastal town of Rockhampton in Queensland state. She was being questioned by police Friday.

Ryan's reappearance coincided with the trial in a Queensland court of Leonard John Fraser, 51, who was charged with the murder of her and three other women. Prosecutors immediately dropped the charge against Fraser for Ryan's murder.

The case has been adjourned until Monday when Fraser's lawyers are expected to argue for the entire trial to be abandoned. AP

Pope calls on world to heal wounds left by conflict in Iraq

The pope quoted from Pope Paul VI's famous anti-war encyclical "Pacem in Berlin, reminding his youthful congregation that Friday is the 40th anniversary of that letter to Catholic bishops.

"It's only in committing to building peace on the four pillars of truth, justice, love and freedom, as we learn in Pacem in Terris, that it is possible to relaunch cooperation between nations."

"We fear this war and its consequences, and we thank you for your constant commitment to peace," a young woman said to lengthy cheering and applause during one of several addresses.

The pontiff, who will be 83 in May, also provided a personal reflection on his 25 years as pope, which will officially be celebrated in the autumn.

"In these 25 years of my pontificate I have been blessed to meet the youth of every part of the world, particularly on the occasion of these festivities. Every one of them has been a worker for the faith," he said. AFP

The pope told a Catholic youth celebration in St. Peter's Square that it was "only by committing ourselves to building peace will it be possible to relaunch cooperation between nations and harmonize the divergent interests of cultures and institutions."

Though he made no direct reference to the conflict in Iraq, the pope was voicing a key Vatican concern throughout the war, the need to avoid a clash between Muslim and Christian civilizations.

John Paul II made the comments during a celebration in St. Peter's Square for tens of thousands of youths from Rome and the surrounding province of Lazio, ahead of the 18th world youth day celebrations on Palm Sunday.

All praises, no benefits, for war vets

MT. SAMAT, Bataan—For Vicente Germar, 87, the most important news on Bataan Day or Araw ng Kagitingan would have been the approval of a new package of assistance for World War II veterans like himself.

During Wednesday's 61st anniversary of the Fall of Bataan, however, the news that came Germar's way was not positive.

As it was for the fewer than 1,000 elderly veterans who had come from various parts of the country and abroad to gather at the Dambana ng Kagitingan here for the yearly celebration.

Philippine, American and Japanese officials simply praised their valiant struggle and sacrifices. After the poignant tribute, a brass band's soulful rendition of the national anthems of the three countries, a shower of pink rose petals from a Huey helicopter over the war shrine and three blasts from a cannon, Germar went home with mixed feelings.

He was thankful that the government, through the state-sponsored ceremony that took less than an hour, still remembered, in the words of Vice President Teofisto Gueingona, "the bravery and indomitable fighting spirit of the Filipinos."

But unlike when he was 21 and with the United States Armed Forces in the Far East (USAFRE) eluding capture by the Japanese, Germar has little time left to wait for adequate support from the government.

His monthly old-age pension of P5,000, which he started receiving only in 1990, is inadequate. "Kinukulang lagi (I'm always short)," he said.

If Germar was looking for relief soon, the new head of the Philippine Veterans Affairs Office in the US Department of National Defense has described the effects of the current US war on Iraq as a "double-edged sword."

Jesus Terry Adevosio said that while the US counts the Philippines as an ally in the Iraq war and is willing to give anti-terror aid to the country, the cost of the war to the US could bring about major re-alignments in its budget for veterans.

The anniversary rites proceeded smoothly although in Capas, Tarlac, five people were hurt when policemen prevented a group of activists from marching toward the Capas National Shrine here where President Macapagal-Arroyo spoke for the Araw ng Kagitingan rites.

More than 300 members of the Kilusan Para sa Pambansang Demokrasya (KPD) reenacted the infamous Death March in Barangay Aranguren, 4 km from the Capas National Shrine, after they were blocked by policemen.

"They (policemen) were taunting us as we were delivering our speeches," said Miliet Morante, KPD secretary general said.

She said five KPD members were hurt when police blocked their way to the shrine. Reports said the police blocking force was composed of 35 policemen and 15 others in civilian clothes.

"Some of our members were hurt when the police started pushing and hitting us with their truncheons without any provocation," a KPD member told the INQUIRER.

Morante also said the police started jeering and taunting them as they delivered their speeches against Japanese war atrocities. Tonette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk

Mayor leads by example on birth control plans

By Jhunnex Napallacan
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—Classic leadership by example.

A 31-year-old mayor of a northern Cebu town did more than pay lip service to his advocacy for birth control.

Mayor Rex Casiano Gerona of Tabuelan town on Tuesday underwent non-surgical vasectomy to help promote the government's campaign on family planning.

He led 13 other husbands from Tabuelan and nearby Tuburan town who underwent the procedure during the launching of the family planning campaign in Tuburan.

Government doctors conducted the procedure on Gerona inside his house in Tuburan, whose mayor Rosemane Suizo, is his sister.

The 13 others were operated on at the Tuburan District Hospital.

Gerona said the procedure was over in 10 minutes. He said he did not feel much pain and that he was able to walk properly after the procedure.

The mayor told the INQUIRER that he decided to undergo a vasectomy in order to lead his constituents in Tabuelan in the campaign for population control.

He said he also wanted to show that he was a responsible father and husband.

Gerona and his wife Marife have three children aged five, three and one. The couple is expecting another baby in the middle of this year because Marife is six months pregnant.

The mayor said he and his wife actually planned to have only three children.

They used the rhythm method, as espoused by the Catholic Church. But, he said, there was an apparent slip-up because his wife got pregnant.

Gerona said he was concerned that they might have more children if he would not undergo vasectomy.

Aetas' deaths near river a mystery

ANGELES CITY—The bodies of an Aeta mother and her three children were found floating along a river in Barangay Maoma in San Felipe, Zambales, on Friday last week.

The four, said to have died of drowning, were identified as Feliza Do-oyan, 38, and her children Oliver, 5; Nelson, 2; and one-year-old Eva.

Chief Insp. Julieta Sapnu, head of the police detective bureau here, said the victims' relatives had retrieved their bodies and took them to Barangay Sapang Baro here.

Police said the four were crossing the river on board their carabao-drawn cart when rampaging waters overturned it.

The lone survivor, Nani Antonio de la Cruz, reported the drowning to the relatives of the Doljoan family in Sapang Bato here.

It takes about five hours by foot to reach Sapang Bato in the Zambales mountain range.

Sapnu said Feliza's husband, Luis, is detained at the San Felipe jail for still unknown reasons. "This was probably the reason his family decided to cross the river and go to their relatives in Sapang Baro. Unfortunately, they did not make it to their destination," she added.

Sapnu dismissed reports that the Doljoans were caught in a crossfire between government troops and New People's Army rebels because the victims' bodies bore no bullet wound. Jun Maltig and Tonette Orejas, PDI Central Luzon Desk

Negros sets aside P1M in funds to induce rain for sugarcane

By Carla R. Gomez
PDI Visayas Bureau

BACOLOD CITY—The Negros Occidental provincial government has set aside P1 million for cloud seeding operations to stop the sporadic fires that are eating up sugarcane plantations in the province.

Gov. Joseph Maranon said the amount was intended for the initial phase of the operation as the Sugar Regulatory Administration (SRA) promised to put up a counterpart fund.

He and Sugar Regulatory Administrator James Ledesma agreed to share the cost of cloud seeding operations to ensure harvest this year.

The cloud seeding operation would start immediately after the Holy Week, said Maranon.

"We are getting the ball rolling for cloud seeding as soon as possible," said Ledesma, in a separate interview.

Maranon, a sugar planter, said the Sagay Sugar Center reported a 20 percent drop in yield as intense heat burned sugarcane and reduced their purity.

Farmers had not planted because of lack of rain.

"This crop year we are hitting a record production of more than 2 million metric tons of sugar, which is the highest in 10 years," Ledesma said.

GMA declaration hurting Davao traders

DAVAO CITY—The Davao City Chamber of Commerce and Industry (DCCCI) will ask government to lift President Macapagal-Arroyo's declaration of "state of lawless violence" in the city as it creates fear in the business sector and among prospective investors.

DCCCI president Romeo Serra said local businessmen were already worried of its effects because it is sending an impression to foreign and domestic investors that Davao City is unsafe.

After the Sasa bombing that killed 16 persons and wounded at least 40 others, President Macapagal-Arroyo declared Davao in a "state of lawless violence."

Serra said DCCCI viewed it with deep concern because of its effects on tourism and business.

Serra said the declaration was creating fear more than the two bombings.

"It is not a come on. And prolonging it would be devastating, disastrous for the business sector," Serra said.

"We are still peaceful—this is the general picture of the city. Our situation here is normal," he said.

Serra said DCCCI has asked Tourism Secretary Richard Gordon to lobby for the lifting of the declaration but there was no response.

"That is why we feel that we now have to go public for the nation's government to know our sentiments," he said. Ayana Mellejor, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Balweg murder suspect cleared

BANGUED, Abra—A judge here dismissed the murder case against Iglesia Filipina Independiente or Aglipayan Church worker Lorna Rivera Baba, the suspected mastermind in the killing of former rebel priest Conrado Balweg in December 1999.

Evidence

Judge Corpus Alzate of the regional trial court here said the pieces of evidence presented by the prosecution were "insufficient to prove the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt."

Of the 14 people accused of conspiring to kill Balweg, Baba was the last to be cleared of murdering Balweg in his ancestral home in Malibcong, Abra, on Dec. 31, 1999.

Conspiring

Baba, three Aglipayan priests and 14 lay workers in Ilocos, La Union and Abra were arrested for allegedly conspiring to kill Balweg.

Despite the admission by the New People's Army Agustin Bernalen Command led by Balweg's brother Jovencio, 28 people, including the church workers, were charged with murder.

Eleven church workers were arrested but the cases against them were subsequently dismissed for lack of evidence.

Arrested

Baba, 39, was arrested on March 17, 2000 in Pidigan town by agents of the Intelligence Service of the Armed Forces of the Philippines (ISAFP), allegedly without a warrant of arrest.

She was handcuffed, blindfolded and transported to military camps where she claimed she was tortured. Frank Climatu, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Iloilo mayors seek ban on village dances

By Ma. Diosa Labiste
PDI Visayas Bureau

ILOILO CITY—Town mayors are seeking a ban on "binayle" or village dances in about 1,700 barangays of Iloilo province.

In a recent resolution, the local chapter of the League of Municipalities (LMP) has asked the provincial board to pass an ordinance, banning public dances because these cause problems in keeping peace and order in rural areas.

The 42 mayors, who comprise the local LMP, said police forces, which see to it that dances are trouble-free, are often short in personnel.

Without the binayle, the LMP said the police can work on other concerns like "economic recovery and agricultural productivity."

The local LMP even found a champion in the provincial police chief, Senior Supt. Juan Mabugat, who supports the plan to abolish binayle.

Mabugat told reporters here that the dances are a "source of criminality and illegal activities" in the province, and are "possible targets of terrorism and sabotage."

The idea of banning binayle does not sit well with historians and sociologists here.

Lawyer and historian Rex Salvilla said binayle is a tradition in the rural areas that dates back to more than a hundred years.

The binayle was not even banned during the days when the Hukbalahap and New People's Army (NPA) controlled many rural and upland villages, said Salvilla.

"Why did they have themselves elected as mayors if they could not maintain the peace and order of their towns?" he said.

Elsa Subong, who teaches sociology courses, said binayle is part of a culture that is beautiful and "must not be sacrificed because there is a problem in governance."

Jessica Salas, who has a doctorate degree in education and has made studies of upland communities, said village dances are a social vehicle for communications.

During binayle, young people socialize, meet the opposite sex, at an age when they are conscious of their sexuality.

Binayle infuses life in a rural community. It is an affair that many young people look forward to, much like how the children of elite and moneyed families in the cities regard their debuts and cotillion, said Subong.

Salas admitted that binayle has become commercialized but local government officials could make it relevant by retrieving the less popular local dances to ensure that young and old could participate. It could also be a tourism-drawing activity.

"If they want to make the dances peaceful, they should ban drinking and sale of alcohol during binayle," Salas said.

The resolution to ban binayle is now at the committee on ordinances and legal matters of the provincial board after it was endorsed by Iloilo Gov. Niel Tupas.

Board member Cecilia Capadocsa, who chairs the committee, said public hearings will be held to get the opinion of barangay officials.

Bayanihan spirit is alive in Bacolod

By Carla P. Gomez
Bacolod City

THE Bayanihan spirit is alive in Bacolod City where more than a thousand volunteers from different walks of life, from movie actors, public officials, socialites, military personnel, government employees, students, firemen and teachers have been working side by side to bridge the widening gap between the rich and the poor.

The volunteers have been gathering every Sunday since March 9 at a 10-hectare property owned by the Negros Occidental provincial government in Barangay Kabugwason, Barangay Mansilingan, in Bacolod City to help build houses for the poor.

The target beneficiaries of the Negros Occidental provincial government-Gawad Kalunga Socialized housing Project are 922 squatter families from Barangays 6, 8 and 9 in Bacolod City.

The Mansilingan site will be the first national model for a massive relocation project wherein the poor will not be forced to evacuate but will be attracted to the new area, said Tony Meloto, Gawad Kalunga executive director.

The houses are being built using the bayanihan spirit, which is similar to the Habitat for Humanity scheme, according to Gov. Joseph Maranon.

"Our slogan is 'no more slums,' as (the slums have been) the cause of many social problems," Meloto said.

Gawad Kalunga, a non-government organization, aims to build an integrated, holistic sustainable program for human and community development, he explained.

Under the relocation scheme, houses will be made available to government employees to be paid for by monthly installments of P700 to P800, in 25 years, Meloto said.

Sweat equity

For families with incomes below P7,000, houses worth P40,000 will be made available to them through "sweat equity," he added.

This means a beneficiary will have to render work at the housing project site for a period equivalent to the cost of the house that he will get. For every eight-hour work rendered, he will get a "pay" of P250, credited to the cost of his home.

The funding for the sweat equity houses will come from the government and the private sector, Meloto said. "We are tapping religious renewal groups, non-government organizations and local governments to help fund the (sweat equity) houses."

The provincial government and GK initially targeted to build 40 houses at the Kabugwason project, but with pledges coming in from different civic organizations to sponsor or build more houses and cash donations pouring in, GK is now ready to build at least 70 houses, project director Bobby Magaña said.

He said organizations that pledged to donate houses included the Rotary Club, Philippine Institute of Civil Engineers, Bacolod City-Negros Occidental Bakers Association, Lions Club, Daves Paints, Dr. Ver Lacson and friends, Women in Travel, John Oroila, Garden Club of Negros Occidental, Zonta Club, and EA International Placement Agency.

The Garden Club has also pledged to do the landscaping of the first 150 houses while the Obstetrics Society pledged to put up a medical clinic.

Stars for others

During the first build day on March 9

movie star Mandy Ochoa, who married the former Gretchen Varella of Bacolod City, Cebu's pride Ace Espinosa and local boxing hero-turned-TV sitcom performer Mansueto "Onyok" Velasco, Jr., found time to help build homes for the squatter residents from Barangays 6, 8 and 9.

Ochoa, who started with the GK program when he was still with the Singles For Christ group in 1998, said the turnout of volunteers was a moving sight, as people from all walks "gathered to heal the broken relationship and widening gap between the rich and the poor."

Ochoa also said there were a growing number of Actors' Guild members now involved in the Gawad project patterned after the Habitat Program of former US President and Nobel Peace Prize awardee Jimmy Carter.

"This time, our visit is totally different. We make other people very happy by helping them build their communities. We volunteer our services because we also want to build a lasting relationship with the Negrenses," Ochoa said.

For Espinosa, he said what he saw was very encouraging. "As Filipinos, like the 1,000 volunteers, we should readily help others who need it most," he said.

Velasco, on the other hand, said he willingly accepted Ochoa's invitation because he wanted to return the favor to Negrenses who had been generous to his cause when he was still struggling as a boxer in Bago City.

"It is ironic because it was Mandy who invited me to my own hometown. When he told me to join him in this trip to help the poor, I readily said yes. I had no second thoughts because in the first place, I also came from the poor," Velasco said.

Heaven sent

On March 30 the first 21 squatter-families from Barangay 6, Bacolod City who were identified to be among the poorest of the poor received their Certificates of Award to avail of lots at the Kabugwason project site.

Myna Hecto, president of Purok Azucena, speaking on behalf of resident-beneficiaries of the housing project, said it was a "hulog sang langit (heaven sent)"

"The response had been very heartwarming, but more donations and volunteers are still needed for the building of homes for the poorest of the poor," Meloto said.

As the Bayanihan spirit lives on in Bacolod, so does the enthusiasm of volunteers who keep coming back each Sunday to build homes for others.

BACOLOD EXCHANGE

Ninfa R. Leonarda

THE MORNING after the bomb explosion at the Sasa pier in Davao City, it was bedlam at the Bacolod airport where security officers suddenly banned all vehicles from the terminal area.

Departing and arriving passengers suddenly found themselves having to walk from the highway to reach the pre-departure area, or out on the road to lock their vehicles that had to join the kilometer-long line of parked cars and public utility transport.

I experienced this since I was leaving for Manila that morning. It was worse for those who had heavy and bulky hand-carried luggage because they had to lug them under the hot sun to and from the terminal.

Strangely, we did not experience this when we left Manila on Monday. Although there were several cops at the highway checkpoint just before the domestic airport, our car was just waved through, without even a peak at its interior. Wasn't this very laxity the cause of the presidential tantrum there a few days ago?

AS IN many other cities in the Philippines, Bacolod has not been spared the paranoia over the severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) that has shaken the world in the past weeks. Fortunately, the one case of a returning overseas worker from Singapore turned out to be a false alarm. But the threat has kept a lot of would-be vacationers in Hong Kong, Vietnam and Thailand home.

THE CITY recently had a very important visitor when Pres. den Macapagal-Arroyo dropped by on her way to Dapitan as part of the inauguration of her Strong Republic Highway project. But she stayed only a few hours, part of it sleeping at the penthouse of the El Fisher Hotel, because she and her party arrived at around 7:30 p.m.

Her first official function was to swear in the new officers of the Negros Press Club headed by Rey Sison of Radyo Bombo. It was, however, a "speechless" affair. All the President did was to induct the officers and shake their hands before having dinner. The club members had been instructed to already hold their program and listen to their own speeches—including the closing remarks—earlier.

THE CITY is still rocking from the bombshells that came with the discovery that about 300 of its residents had been swindled of some P100 million in the infamous pyramid scheme perpetrated by three companies whose officers, along with their money, are now nowhere to be found. The police and the National Bureau of Investigation have been brought in, and charges filed, but there is little hope of recouping their losses.

MEANTIME, Bacolod city officials are still smarting from the beating that they got in a survey conducted by the People's Graftwatch that involved permanent employees of the city government as respondents. The result showed that only 6.6 percent of the workers rated the performance of Mayor Luzviminda Valdez as satisfactory, with 93.4 percent saying it was unsatisfactory.

They also rated Rep. Monico Puentevillas as 18.9 percent satisfactory with 81.1 percent saying they were not satisfied with his performance. The Sangguniang Panlungsod, got 5.6 percent satisfactory rating while 64.4 percent said they were not satisfied with the councilors' performance.

When Valdez reacted and claimed that the survey had been manipulated, some of her officials called for another survey, but for some reason or another gave up the idea later.

The Graftwatch chairman, a known friend of Valdez, has announced that his next survey will have media people as respondents, and they will be answering the same questions as those posed to the employees. The problem is that there are a lot of media practitioners who are "embedded" in city hall, if not as casual employees themselves, with their wives, sisters, brothers and other relatives in the employ of the mayor.

A previous survey, with members of the business community as respondents had also shown depressing results for the officials. The survey covered the year and a half that the officials had been in office.

Little Isah gets 'overwhelming' help

By Hazel P. Villa
Iloilo City

THANKS to the kindness of strangers and generous doctors, a little girl with a congenital heart disease will finally have a new lease on life as she has flown into Manila on Friday for a series of tests to determine the procedure needed for closing a "hole" in her heart called Patent Ductus Arteriosus (PDA), one of the many types of "holes" in the heart.

More than 45 persons throughout the country responded to adopted 5-year-old Isah Mae Rose Buni's plight that was published in the INQUIRER Visayas Section on April 7, detailing how the childless Buni couple struggles to keep their daughter alive despite their meager financial resources with Rose as a teacher and her husband Jaime, a carpenter.

Soon after arriving at the Manila Domestic Airport via Air Philippines, Isah Mae Rose and her mother proceeded to the Philippine General Hospital for a series of tests to be conducted by Dr. Jonas Del Rosario and Dr. Charles Cuaso, both US-trained interventional pediatric cardiologists who have volunteered their services with a significant discount.

The Kabayan Hotel at Rotonda, Pasay City, through its Ilongga marketing consultant Lorna Longno, accommodated Rosario and Isah for two nights for free.

Anonymous donors

An executive from Manila who requested anonymity told the INQUIRER he would shoulder the cost of a device worth P80,000 to "close" Isah's PDA and P15,000 for medications after talking to Dr. Del Rosario while others sent separate donations worth P1,000 to P10,000 in a single deposit.

Dr. Del Rosario said the entire tran-scatheter closure of Isah's PDA costs about P160,000 to P250,000 depending on the institution where it will be performed. This includes the Amplazter device, which costs $1500 and has to be imported from the United States.

Most of the good Samaritans preferred to remain anonymous while others offered prayers for the little girl and her adoptive mother Rosario, a teacher at the Iloilo National High School.

As of Wednesday afternoon, donations have been deposited at PNB account number 415-630-982-1 under the name of Isah Mae Rose Buni. Rosario has recorded a total of P47,600 worth of donations from PNB and via courier since Tuesday.

Mrs. Buni said she has used part of this amount to buy plane tickets and other incidental expenses of Isah.

Since Mrs. Buni had no bank account, Hermosa Vela, regional cashier of the Central Bank in Iloilo and Isagani Valderama, head of PNB Iloilo's Cash Department on Tuesday facilitated the quick opening of an account and provided an ATM Card so that donations could be accepted.

'Plug the hole'

Dr. Del Rosario said in a telephone interview Wednesday that they have to evaluate Isah Mae's condition first and, depending on the size of the PDA, will have to order an Amplazter device for a transcatheter closure, a non-surgical procedure that will entail implanting the Amplazter in the PDA to effectively "plug the hole."

He said it would require the use of special catheters that will be navigated through the heart using a blood vessel from the groin. This alternative treatment avoids a large surgical wound, is highly effective and well accepted in many parts of the world.

Dr. Cuaso, an assistant professor at the University of Santo Tomas College of Medicine, explained via email that a PDA is a normal blood vessel that should have closed shortly after birth.

"If this blood vessel is significantly large in size, it may cause heart enlargement, 'flooding' of the lungs leading to pulmonary hypertension and even heart failure. This blood vessel has to be 'closed' to avoid these problems," he wrote.

"Children suffering from these may have exercise intolerance, poor weight gain or frequent upper respiratory infections," said Dr. Del Rosario, also a clinician, associate professor at the University of the Philippines College of Medicine.

Dr. Del Rosario said he would set the date for the operation only after the tests have been done. He will perform the actual transcatheter procedure jointly with Dr. Cuaso at the PGH. Dr. Cuaso said to date since August 2001, 33 Filipino patients have benefited from the transcatheter closure using the Amplazter device.

"All of them have gone home within 48 hours after admission. Significantly, many of these patients had quick resolution of their symptoms once the PDA is closed and were able to function normally as if nothing happened," said Dr. Cuaso.

Dr. Rowena Pascual, a cardiologist at St. Luke's Medical Center said in the April 7, 2003 story on Isah Mae that procedures for closing the PDA cost anywhere from P100,000 to P350,000 depending on the type thereof and the institution where it will be performed.

"I am very touched with the way total strangers have responded to Isah's plight and I am grateful for their help," said Mrs. Buni who was overwhelmed with the daily text messages she receives from people who say they are praying for Isah or asking for her bank account number so they can "give a little miracle."

Those who may want to get in touch with Mrs. Buni can text her at 09203427945.

Bohol lists guidelines on dealing with SARS

By Chito A. Fuentes
PDI Visayas Bureau

TAGBILARAN CITY—Health authorities in Bohol are not taking any chances with the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), coming out with guidelines for health personnel, hospitals and the public.

Dr. Francisco Razalo, Bohol Provincial Health Office (PHO) chief, said the three sets of guidelines have been approved by Gov. Erico Aumentado and are ready for implementation in the province's 47 towns and this city.

"Maybe it is," Razalo replied when asked whether the SARS guidelines he formulated are the first for local government units in the country.

The PHO chief said the guidelines were adopted from the World Health Organization guidelines and those from other countries.

He said that the guidelines for health personnel and hospitals were drawn up to help them deal with suspected SARS cases.

The guidelines for the public list down steps to take should anyone have symptoms of SARS.

Razalo said preventive measures are important although there are still no recorded case of SARS in the country.

He said the threat should never be underestimated because SARS could spread rapidly.

Razalo said health authorities would meet with personnel of the local Air Transportation Office and Philippine Ports Authority to discuss measures to prevent the entry of the dreaded disease into Bohol.

In his guidelines, Razalo said one suspected SARS case in the Philippines was confirmed to be a non-SARS illness.

However, SARS has spread in Asia, Europe and North America with about 56 deaths and more than 1,550 cases reported occurring in 15 countries so far.

"Because of the precautionary measures already taken worldwide to prevent the further spread of SARS, the Philippines is in the advantaged position of ensuring that SARS would not enter the country if everybody will assume responsibility and do his role accordingly," the guidelines said.

Razalo also played down the possibility of SARS infecting Bohol at this time.

Jellyfish still threat to Luzon power supply

By Yolanda Sotelo-Fuertes
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

SUAL, Pangasinan—They are very fragile looking and even melt under the heat of the sun, but jellyfish can plunge the entire Luzon, like they did in December 1999, into darkness.

These soft-bodied organisms abound these days in the vicinity of the 1,200-megawatt Sual power plant, which gets its cooling water from the Baquion Bay here. But the abundance of jellyfish here poses a threat to the plant's operation.

To keep the pesky jellyfishes at bay, the plant's management has put three layers of nets at the water inlet and formed a "jellyfish patrol" composed of community residents.

The jellyfish patrol works on three shifts, 24 hours a day and keeps the plant's cooling water intake free of intruding sea animals. It also alerts the plant's personnel to the sea creatures' presence.

Three weeks ago, officials of the power plant reported that jellyfish got past the nets and were sucked into the pumps. But plant personnel were able clear the pumps of the creatures before they could affect the plant's operations.

Bernie Babaran, deputy station manager and technical services manager of the Sual plant, assured that the presence of jellyfish in the bay would not affect the operations of the plant.

"We have installed an effective and efficient netting system in place which (is) maintained 24 hours a day, seven days a week," Babaran said.

The jellyfish also caused irritation and frustration to local fishermen because their presence seemed to drive away other fish species that used to abound in the bay.

'Labong-labong'

A Sual resident said instead of fish, the fishermen catch jellyfish known locally as "labong-labong." These are thrown away or left to disintegrate in the beaches.

Westly Rosario, chief of the Bureau of Fisheries and Aquatic Resources Research Center in Dagupan City, said "jellyfish blooms" occur when the climatic condition becomes conducive for them to multiply.

The jellyfish, which are 95- to 99-percent water, congregate in cove areas with plenty of zooplankton and small fish that serve as their food, he said.

A study commissioned by the Mirant Sual Corp., the plant's owner, showed that "large numbers of jellyfish seasonally occur in the bay during the months of November to April."

The study said the jellyfish's "large population is (a) natural event that has occurred long before the establishment of the power plant in the area."

The Sual resident, however, claimed that it was only during the plant's operations that jellyfish "bloomed" in the area.

"While it is true that the jellyfish have been present in the area even before the plant was built, they definitely were not that plentiful and that big," the resident said.

Fish cages

The presence of fish cages in the Sual waters could also have contributed to the seasonal jellyfish blooms because of organic matter that contributes to the reproduction of phytoplankton.

Phytoplankton serves as food of zooplankton, the main food of the jellyfish, Rosario said.

When the Sual power plant management claimed that jellyfish had caused the Luzon-wide power failure on Dec. 10, 1999, many people raised their eyebrows in disbelief.

But Joyce Gacutan, press relations officer of the Mirant Sual Corp., explained that on that day, there was a jellyfish bloom, a "seasonal occurrence in the bay" which the management did not take into consideration when the plant was designed.

"The management did not know then that jellyfish abound in the bay during some months of the year," Gacutan said.

Is absolutely no security on the street," said Veronique Taveau, spokeswoman for the United Nations Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator for Iraq.

"Humanitarian assistance will be hurt."

US President George W. Bush promised Iraqis the United States and its allies would help end the chaos.

"Coalition forces will help maintain law and order, so that Iraqis can live in security," Bush said in a taped message.

The United States is trying to organize a meeting of Iraqi opposition leaders in the next few days to start the process of selecting an interim government.

Victory in Mosul

Elsewhere, US and Kurdish forces took Iraq's third city of Mosul without a fight yesterday, sealing their victory in the north.

US special forces had entered and taken control of the key northern oil city, US officials said, after Kurdish fighters reportedly entered overnight.

US troops were also in control of the nearby oil-rich city of Kirkuk, Major Rumi Nielson-Green at the US central command in Qatar said. The city was seized by Kurdish fighters on Thursday, a day after Saddam Hussein's regime collapsed.

Kurdish guerrillas said they would hand over the important oil hub, traditional capital of the Kurds, to US troops later yesterday.

Rampant looting

In Baghdad, Iraqi gunmen, apparently from the long oppressed Shiite majority in the east-side slums, battled Fedayeen paramilitaries loyal to Saddam overnight, US military sources said.

Two days after US forces drove tanks into the heart of Baghdad, the whereabouts of Saddam and other former Iraqi leaders were still unknown.

But US General Tommy Franks, commander of US troops in Iraq, said yesterday the leadership of the regime inside Iraq was "either dead or running like hell."

"That is the case with the leadership of the regime inside Iraq," he said.

Franks said a gunbattle at a Baghdad mosque on Thursday came in response to US intelligence that Iraqi leaders were sheltering in the area, adding that the search for Saddam and his associates would continue.

"We have at any given point in time two to three, in some cases more, sets of intelligence that will indicate regime targets in Baghdad proper, as well as in a great many places inside Iraq," he said.

"The engagement (at the mosque) was in response to intelligence that indicated leadership in this general area," he said, stressing that US forces had come under fire from within the mosque itself.

"That (search) is going to continue. We are going to keep going and we're going to keep looking," he said.

In efforts to hunt down deposed Iraqi leaders, a US aircraft hit the residence of Barzan Ibrahim Hasan al-Tikriti, Saddam's half-brother and former head of Iraq's Mukhabarat intelligence service, with six "smart bombs."

The results of the attack on the building, which was also an operations center for the intelligence service, were not yet known. There was no indication US forces thought Saddam might be in the house near Ramadi, 110 km west of Baghdad.

Cities fall in north

US troops moved to take control of the strategic prize of Kirkuk and began by spreading through the oil fields near the city, which provide 40 percent of Iraq's oil revenue. Hundreds of dejected Iraqis were seen walking south.

The Kurds have promised to leave Kirkuk, helping to calm Turkish alarm after the Kurdish "peshmerga" militia took it over in a largely bloodless rout of Iraqi forces.

"Yes, we expect to be leaving when the Americans arrive, and that may well be later today," said Mam Rostam, a Kurdish commander whose forces had rushed into Kirkuk, apparently without the full agreement of Washington.

Ankara fears the Kurds could use the city's wealth to finance an independent state and stimulate separatist demands by Turkey's large Kurdish minority.

A Kurdish commander at a checkpoint just outside Mosul said fighters loyal to Saddam had fled. Correspondents in Mosul said they saw no fighting but crowds went on a looting rampage, stripping buildings bare and torching a central market.

Events in the north left Saddam's home town of Tikrit, which is 175 km north of Baghdad on the main road from Mosul, as the one significant target left to the US-led forces. Mosul is 390 north of the capital.

Mob kills Shiite leader

In Najaf on Thursday, a mob stabbed and shot to death Iraqi Shiite leader Abdul Majid al-Khoei and an aide in the gold-domed Imam Ali Mosque, the city's holiest shrine. The killings seemed certain to widen divisions and sow hatred among Shiites, who are 60 percent of the population.

Abdul Majid returned to Iraq only last week but his presence provoked intense criticism from other Iraqi Shiite dissidents keen to assert their authority after the fall of Saddam.

A suicide bomber detonated explosives at a US checkpoint in the capital on Thursday evening. "Some are dead in the attack but I don't know how many," Marine officer Matt Baker said. A Pentagon spokesman said four soldiers were wounded.

Fear of another suicide attack led US Marines to open fire on a vehicle which ignored warnings to stop at a checkpoint in the southern city of Nassirya yesterday and two children inside were killed, the Marines said.

Latest figures for US war losses list 105 dead and 11 missing. Thirty British troops have been killed. There is no authoritative estimate for Iraqi military and civilian casualties but they certainly run into the thousands.

A humanitarian effort to bring food and other supplies to Iraq was beginning. Pentagon spokeswoman Victoria Clarke said a British ship unloaded more than 200,000 tons of food, water and medicine at the southern port of Umm Qasr.

The United States has still not confirmed finding any of the weapons of mass destruction it says Iraq had been hiding—the issue which prompted the invasion.

THE FAMILIAR face of Mohammed Saeed al-Sahaf, the Iraqi minister of information, mousting with endless enthusiasm has outrageously familiar lies during one of his daily briefings.

Sahaf morphs into ...

PR history, Sahaf confidently boasted during his daily briefings that Baghdad was safe and the invaders would be slaughtered, even as US tanks rumbled down streets nearby.

"The infidels are committing suicide by the hundreds on the gates of Baghdad," he told reporters, despite Iraqi troops blatantly running for cover on the other side of the river.

Television news junkies transfixed by Sahaf's daily briefings are now logging onto a day-old website featuring his finest invective against US and British "infidels." The site, (<http://www.WeLoveTheIraqiInformationMinister.com>), is a "coalition effort of bloodthirsty hawks and ineffectual doves" united in their admiration for al-Sahaf and his pronouncements, such as: "I now inform you that you are too far from reality."

Among al-Sahaf's now-famous declarations was: "There are no American infidels in Baghdad. Never!"

Cult figure

Sahaf became a cult figure on television with his daily briefings, appearing from behind a sea of microphones as he condemned the American "infidels" and often flatly denied what viewers around the world saw unfolding on their TV screens.

Listing his "all time greats," the Sahaf website includes: "God will roast their stomachs in hell at the hands of Iraqis" and "Our final assessment is that they will all die."

Writer and former Greenpeace activist Kieran Mulvaney, a Briton living in Alaska, said he and friends got the idea for the site while watching cable news coverage of the three-week-old war.

"I mentioned to one of my friends that the best part is watching this guy," Mulvaney told Reuters on Thursday. "He is so brazen that I could almost admire him."

Website 'exploded'

Mulvaney and his friends designed, built and put up the site in three days. Within hours of going live on the Internet, the site "has exploded," Mulvaney said.

The same day, US troops marched into Baghdad and al-Sahaf disappeared, or in the view of his new website, went on "administrative leave."

"I hope he is alive somewhere so he knows how famous he has become," Mulvaney said. "We've had all kinds of e-mail from literally all over the world. We even had a few e-mails from within the Pentagon saying, 'We really like this guy and we miss him.'"

The site already is offering T-shirts and mugs bearing al-Sahaf's best-loved statements ("My feelings—as usual—we will slaughter them all!") and has selected actor and director Sydney Poitack to play the information minister in the Hollywood version of the war.

Spare Sahaf campaign

Internet message boards have also been packed with debates over the celebrity minister's unconventional PR techniques.

One writer imagined Sahaf expiating a troubled economy. "We do not have economic problems! These infidels, the waste of maggots they are, are deceiving us with facts and their charis. This graph they showed us was upside down!" the posting read.

Mulvaney said he would appeal for sightings of al-Sahaf, and there are plans to poll fans about what the beret-wearing minister should do after the war.

One fan has advocated an urgent campaign to spare al-Sahaf if he is found: "He is too much of a global asset to be murdered/shot/stabbed or otherwise wasted."

hija na ang Pilipinas. And if they're selling the properties to acquire other properties then delikado (it's dangerous)," Tatad told the INQUIRER. "Lagareng Hapon yan. Kita dito, kita doon."

Tatad has asked the Senate to immediately launch an inquiry into the proposed sale, which he believed was "totally dirty."

But Finance Undersecretary Eric Recto, of the government's Privatization Council, contested Tatad's claim, saying there was "no rush" in the disposition of the seven pieces of property.

"The rush here is we want to get all this information done (referring to, among others, property valuation and the terms of reference for the bidding) so that we can arrive at a decision soon whether we proceed or not. That's the long and short of it," he said.

Last March 25, Ambassador to Washington Albert del Rosario directed four Philippine diplomatic missions in the United States to "prepare and submit soonest to the embassy a copy of the disposition plan for the specific property within your mission's respective jurisdictions."

Del Rosario said "it will be desirable for the posts, in coordination with the embassy, to have implemented the plan, even if it is only a partial implementation, in time for the President's state visit to the US." President Macapagal-Arroyo was to have visited the United States in the first week of April, but postponed her trip because of the war in Iraq.

But Recto said that during council meetings, "there's no discussion whatsoever that (sale) has to be done because of a trip deadline. My mandate, in particular, is to ensure whatever effort is undertaken with the greatest degree of transparency and fairness and to give the government the best value for its assets."

"I have no other marching orders as far as the disposition of the property is concerned," Recto said.

Tatad assailed Del Rosario, whom he accused of suspiciously rushing the sale. "Albert is the problem. His credentials are suspect because he was once a property developer. He's into real estate," said the opposition politician.

The INQUIRER has learned, however, that Vice President Teodoro Gungona had originally recommended to Macapagal the sale of prime Philippine properties in Houston and Seattle, to help plug the budget deficit.

Selling the properties may raise about $59.57 million (approximately P3.3 billion), the "greater part" of which will be used in reducing the deficit, Del Rosario wrote the President last Nov. 8.

"(After) factoring the maximum 30 percent down payment ($18 million) for the acquisition of the relevant replacement properties, there will be a balance of approximately $47 million that would be available to reduce the budget deficit," Del Rosario claimed.

Portions of the sales proceeds will also be used to acquire "more desirable (real estate) with better terms" for the Philippine consulates in Los Angeles, Chicago and New York as well as the country's permanent representative to the United Nations, also in New York City, Del Rosario wrote.

Malacañang sources have furnished the INQUIRER a copy of the memorandum (sent through Executive Secretary Alberto Romulo), among other documents.

"Disposing of these properties and replacing them with more suitable properties that are relatively repair-free and low maintenance would relieve the Philippine government and (the) foreign service of the perennial problem of ever increasing expenditures for repair and maintenance of underutilized and deteriorating assets," the envoy also said.

Seven properties

The six other pieces of property, according to the Privatization Council, are the following:

• A 4,350-square-foot property in Houston, Texas with an assessed value of $388,000. It is located on Glen Haven St., a prime location. It was acquired by the government in 1979 and used as the official residence of the Philippine consul general. After the mission's closure in 1995, the property "has been unoccupied and has deteriorated progressively through the years."

• A 4,800-sq.-ft. vacant lot on 620 Terry Avenue in Seattle with an assessed value of $240,000. It was purchased by the government more than two decades ago as the intended site of the Philippine consulate in Washington state. But the plan never materialized.

• The Philippine Center on New York City's Fifth Avenue, which has a total area of more than 47,300 square feet over the building's seven floors. Acquired in the early 1970s, it houses the offices of the Philippine consulate general, the Permanent Mission to the UN, Philippine Center Management Board and the Commission on Audit's international division, among others. But the property, which has an estimated fair market value of $22.7 million to $25 million, has tax liabilities of $14 million.

• The Philippine Center buildings on 445-447 Sutter St. which is in the center of San Francisco's business district. The property, which houses the Philippine consulate, among other government offices, has a fair market value of about $13 million.

• The old chancery building on 1617 Massachusetts Avenue, Washington DC, said to be worth at least $2.98 million. The property has been idle since 1992 when the Philippine embassy moved to the new chancery across the street.

• A residential home on 945 Timber Hill Road in Highland Park, an hour's drive from the Philippine consulate in Chicago. The property, valued at $450,000, was acquired by the government sometime in the early 1990s through a real estate mortgage loan with the New York branch of the Philippine National Bank. The loan has an outstanding balance of $253,000.

No decision

Recto said the Privatization Council "has not made a decision to sell."

"At this point, we're not sure yet. Are we going to develop or sell the property? We haven't gotten to that point," said Recto, who jointly oversees the disposition of the properties with Del Rosario.

Recto said some people had been "putting the cart ahead of the horse" and emphasized that "it might be premature for any negative conclusions to be made at this point."

Recto said that "disposition can be achieved in a number of ways. We can dispose by way of leasing, joint venture developments, build-operate-transfer schemes or by outright sale," among others.

"There are a number of options that I think will be made available to us which will be best arrived at when we have the benefit of a third party adviser or consultant to help us arrive at those conclusions," he said. "On a scale of one to 10, we've just passed number one which is having agreed to take the necessary studies to get us to a point where we can decide what to do next."

On Tatad's assertion that the timing was wrong for the disposition of the properties because US property values are down, Recto said otherwise.

He argued that "US property values may be off their peak, but if you'll compare what those values are today versus what they were five years ago then you'll most likely conclude it's still a good time to enter into disposition transactions."

"Despite 9/11 the New York real estate market has not deteriorated," Recto noted. With a report from contributor Rita Villadiego in New York.

no SARS. It's all differential diagnosis, circumstantial evidence."

Dayrit said at the teleconference that until a diagnostic tool for the disease was found, all suspect cases were called "probable SARS cases."

But Dr. Maria Consolida Quizon, president of the National Epidemiology Center, told the Inquirer: "It's SARS. It's a SARS case. We count it as SARS."

She said, however, that Dayrit was also right in calling it a "probable SARS case" because there was yet no confirmatory test for the disease.

"So, strictly speaking, it is a probable SARS case," she said.

But in a separate interview, Quizon said on reports that some of those who had undergone "observation" for SARS were being discriminated against, Quizon said it indicated that they had to work harder to tell people there was yet no confirmed case of SARS in the country.

After learning of the foreigner's case, the President allocated P500 million to upgrade the SARS-management facilities of San Lazaro Hospital in Manila and the Research Institute for Tropical Medicine in Alabang.

She appealed to those who have traveled to SARS-infected areas to immediately seek treatment as soon as symptoms appear.

She also ordered all Philippine consulates to report daily any new reported SARS cases in the past 10 days; required airlines from Hong Kong, China and Singapore to strictly screen Philippine-bound passengers before departure and bar those with possible SARS symptoms from boarding; and ordered airports in Manila, Cebu and Laoag to strictly screen arrivals from cities with known SARS cases.

Shopping in HK

Dayrit said at the teleconference that the foreigner had been dividing his time between Manila and Hong Kong.

"A week before he became ill, he went shopping in Hong Kong," Dayrit said. "When he came back a few days later, he developed fever. He sought a physician, and was immediately confined."

Dayrit said the foreigner was diagnosed with a possible "hemophilus influenza," an infection of the respiratory tract, and was given antibiotics. "However, his clinical course was not consistent with hemophilus influenza," so doctors suspected possible SARS.

In a phone interview, Dayrit reiterated that the foreigner did not experience "respiratory difficulty."

He said the man's X-ray also did not show a pattern distinct in SARS patients, and surmised that the man's "immune system may have been strong."

Dayrit said the man had been "without fever for 48 hours, and should have been allowed to go home today (Friday)."

But the President advised them to keep the man in the hospital for seven days more to enable doctors to "track his clinical symptoms" for a longer period of time, Dayrit said.

"We have actually observed him, and lucky for us, he had not developed any severe respiratory illness... no respiratory difficulty," the health secretary said.

The man has been asked to list the people he had contact with, although he has supposedly claimed to have met only with a few people since arriving here.

"He was always on the move," Dayrit said. "He didn't stay long in a place with anyone."

Dayrit made the assurance that there was little chance of the foreigner having spread the virus.

"You are not contagious until you become symptomatic of SARS," Dayrit said. "It's when you develop respiratory symptoms that you become highly contagious."

Quizon also said the foreigner's X-ray had shown symptoms of "ordinary pneumonia," and not the distinct SARS pattern.

"But when you see pneumonia in the X-ray of a person who has cough and fever, who came from a SARS-infected area, then it strengthens the diagnosis that it is SARS," she said.

Impact on ecotourism

At a press conference, Tourism Secretary Richard Gordon said the global effects of SARS on ecotourism would be a major topic at the forthcoming meeting of Asia-Pacific leaders in Bali.

"Tourism will not stop just because there is a terrorist attack, SARS, the Iraq war or certain problems that are happening in the world," said Gordon, who is scheduled to leave for Bali today to assume his post as the new chair of the Pacific Asia Travel Association.

Philippine tourism "remains still a little bit ahead of others in terms of growth, although volume-wide other territories are better," he said, recalling that the country posted a 2-percent growth in tourism in the first quarter.

Gordon said the global media networks had identified the Philippines as SARS-infected. While the reports were later denied, he said, "the damage has already been done."

"The country is SARS-free, and we should tell the world about it," he said.

Gordon also advocated the issuance of a travel advisory, not a ban, on tourists coming from SARS-affected countries like Hong Kong, China and Singapore.

He said travel bans should not be issued because he did not believe that "the danger is so great."

But he called for "extraordinary diligence in the reception of tourists or returning residents."

Filipina seriously ill in HK

HONG KONG—A Filipino SARS patient is in "critical" condition in a government hospital's intensive care unit.

C.Y., 57, was admitted to the United Christian Hospital on March 30 with high fever and shortness of breath. She was taken to the ICU when her condition worsened.

Her fever has since dropped and her blood pressure is normal. But her breathing continues to be difficult.

"Her condition is critical," said the hospital's press relations officer.

Another member of the hospital staff said the woman "is currently being aided by a mechanical ventilator with a strong oxygen support." She is also taking ribavirin, an anti-viral drug used to treat SARS patients, and antibiotics.

C.Y., who is married to a Chinese resident, is one of the 120 SARS patients receiving treatment in public hospitals in Hong Kong. It is not known where and how she contracted the disease.

Philippine Consul General Victoria Bataclan confirmed that C.Y. was being treated as a SARS patient. "We are monitoring her condition every day," she said.

Bataclan denied reports that the number of Filipino SARS patients had risen to 25, and said there were only seven confirmed Filipino cases.

In Manila, President Macapagal-Arroyo appealed to Filipinos abroad not to come home for the Holy Week if they had SARS symptoms, to prevent infecting others.

"I will never, never prevent a Filipino from coming home, but please be guided by a genuine concern for others, especially your own loved ones," Ms. Macapagal said in a statement.

She asked them to stay put and wait until they recovered before coming home.

"This is one sacrifice I am asking for the sake of our country," she said. Gal R. Roma of Hong Kong News, contributor; Dona Z. Passibugan in Manila

"We have to maintain the viability of Meralco," Cuna said.

Meralco is "very seriously financially affected" by the high court's decision, said Cuna. The refund could cost as much as P29 billion, consumer groups have said.

In London, Standard & Poor's Ratings Services said yesterday that it was currently reviewing Meralco's financial and operating position, in response to the SC decision. Given Meralco's already weak liquidity position, immediate enforcement of the refund could negatively affect the rating on the company.

The other day, Meralco president Jesus Francisco said the company would be unable to make a one-time payment, warning that such a huge refund could lead to its bankruptcy.

"We are in deep financial problem right now. We are in restructuring mode with our creditors, which is worsened by the court's decision," Cuna said.

Congress reaction

Administration Rep. Raul Gonzalez, deputy speaker for the Visayas, joined opposition legislators in calling on Meralco to implement the refund. But he went a step further. He urged Meralco to return, not only the excess

'Meralco formula' may hike power rates in provinces

BAGUIO CITY—The "Meralco situation" may lead to increased power rates in the provinces.

The Supreme Court decision ordering the Manila Electric Co. to implement a refund said it would be "a dangerous precedent" if Meralco were allowed to "treat income tax as operating cost." But the Energy Regulatory Commission charges, but also the interest the money may have earned through bank deposits or company investments.

"They (Meralco officials) should account (for) whether they deposited money (from the excess charges) in banks or account for investments using this money," Gonzalez said in a phone interview yesterday.

He wondered, for instance, whether the money was used in other Lopez investments such as the Rockwell Power Plant, a high-end mall in Makati City.

"The people should not demand only the P28-billion refund but demand a refund of the interest of the money," Gonzalez said.

But opposition leader Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr. took a more measured approach, calling on Meralco to spread the refund over a longer period to preserve the company's viability. Pimentel said Meralco and its customers can work out a plan for the refund of the over-billings in a way that will not endanger the company's financial condition.

"My suggestion is for Meralco to enter into an agreement with its customers, subject to the approval of the Energy Regulatory Commission, by which they could be refunded in the form of reductions in their monthly electric billings," he said.

He said another mode was to give the customers the option to convert the refundable amounts into shares of stocks in Meralco, thereby broadening the company's ownership base.

Pimentel noted that Meralco was not required to give a one-shot refund to its customers, saying the high court's ruling allows flexibility in the manner of enforcing the refund to prevent the company from going bankrupt.

Leticia Ibay, ERC officer in charge, said the quasi-judicial body would ask Meralco for its ideas on how to implement the refund.

But Ibay also said that, in the past, the agency allowed overcharges to be refunded over a period that was proportionate to the period the overcharges were collected. This would mean that the Meralco refund would be spread over nine years, since the excess charges were collected starting March 1994.

Consumer groups

But a consumer group yesterday pushed for an immediate, lump-sum refund of P10 billion to would actually get a -7 percent rate. This tells us that Beneco's rates are far, far lower than Meralco's rates," Versoza said.

"But I don't really know what the ERC will be imposing or what rate structure it will apply (given its position on income taxes)," he said. Vincent Cabrera, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Meralco's residential customers, even as another group said the entire amount, some P28 billion, belonged only to small consumers.

The People Opposed to Warrantless Electricity Rates (Power) said it preferred the lump-sum cash refund. Other possible modes of refund, it said, could take the form of cash refunds spread over one to three years; reductions in monthly bills spread over one to three years; and stock options for consumers.

"Any of these modes would cost Meralco P10.5 billion, an amount that it could very well afford," said engineer Ramon Ramirez, one of the convenors of Power. "Refunds to commercial and industrial users could be made later."

But Pete Ilagan, president of the National Association of Electricity Consumers for Reforms, said Meralco's commercial and industrial customers had no right to any share of the refund since they had already passed on the cost of electricity to consumers of their products and services.

"This is why we have been saying all along that Meralco was lying when it said a refund gave ordinary consumers false hopes," Ilagan said.

He reiterated his call for Malacañang to issue an executive order forming a "Consumer's Power Commission"—consisting of consumer and civil society groups—which would manage the refund.

Power and the Samahan ng Nagtataguyod sa Agham at Teknolohiya para sa Sambayanan also demanded that the 16.7-centavo-per-kilowatt-hour in overcharges be removed immediately from Meralco's monthly billing.

"This will result in an instant reduction in power bills, a much-deserved reprieve for consumers who for nine years have been robbed by Meralco," said Ramirez.

The engineer added: "Meralco should not play the role of a victim and instead prepare to return its loot." With reports from AFP; Christine Avendaño, Cynthia Balana, Ronnel Domingo and Gerald G. Lacuarta partially investigate any allegation of torture and ill-treatment of (arrested or detained) children."

Amnesty Int'l 'shocked' by RP treatment of young offenders

In the 18-page report released last night, AI detailed reports of human rights violations against child suspects and offenders upon their arrest, detention and sentencing.

AI said the Philippines was one of the first countries in Asia to ratify the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in 1990 and lauded its many national executive orders and laws which provide for the welfare and protection of children, including those "in conflict with the law."

But it noted that in practice, key provisions in these orders and laws like access to social workers and legal counsel, detention as a last resort, and prompt charging before the proper authorities are "regularly violated."

The AI is concerned because most children committing crimes belong to the marginalized and disadvantaged sectors of a society.

The AI report cited, for instance, that majority of Filipino children in detention appeared to have been arrested without warrants because they were reportedly caught while committing a crime, like vagrancy and substance abuse (usually sniffing glue).

A child's language

Philippine law also requires authorities to immediately inform these children, "in a language that they understand," why they are being arrested, but AI said that based on its interviews with non-government organizations this was not being observed.

Likewise, it said, authorities do not establish whether or not the suspect they arrested is below 18 years. This raises fears that many children in conflict with the law "may be treated and detained as adults until they are brought to a judicial authority."

AI is also alarmed about reports of torture or ill-treatment of child suspects, citing cases where they are punched, slapped, their fingernails singed with a lit cigarette, given electric shocks and their heads shaved as punishment.

AI is also aware of reports of psychological torture and intimidation... including taking child suspects to graveyards, threatening them with guns or threatening that they will be subjected to the death penalty," the report said.

These human rights violations against children were committed by barangay tanods and police officers.

No social worker, lawyer

In addition, the AI said authorities fail to notify parents or guardians as well as the Department of Social Welfare and Development about the arrest of these children.

The report said AI has documented cases in which children have been detained for weeks and months and, in one case, more than a year without a social worker visiting the child.

Authorities likewise do not provide legal counsel for child suspects upon their arrest or brought immediately to a judicial official, thus violating their right to challenge the legality of their detention.

AI noted with "grave concern" cases where children are detained in "adult facilities," subjected to torture and exposed to unsanitary conditions.

"Such intimate and constant contact with adult detainees can impact on a child's life in a number of damaging ways," AI said. "In the absence of other forms of education, children learn from their adult criminal suspect companions, and some children are reportedly recruited into gangs."

The report also noted cases where some child offenders receive adult sentences and are detained without being sentenced. AI said it has information indicating that eight child offenders have been sentenced to death, it recommended that these sentences be commuted instead.

Canadian PM visits Chinatown to dispel killer pneumonia threat

TORONTO—Canada's prime minister paid a surprise visit Thursday to one of Toronto's normally bustling Chinatowns, seeking to persuade Canadians not to let the mysterious SARS virus derail their everyday lives.

Jean Chretien brought members of his Liberal caucus to dine with community leaders in Chinatown East, a colorful district where exotic fruits and vegetables are piled up outside chaotic shops selling everything from woks to watermelons.

"There is no danger. All the precautions have been taken. I think I wanted to [set] an example," Chretien told reporters before a meal of spring rolls, sweet and sour pork and barbecue duck at the Luen Fat Seafood and BBQ Restaurant.

After the meal—which cost $200 ($130) for 30 guests—

Chretien scrambled across mounds of melting snow to shake hands with cheering onlookers.

"I think everybody should do the same thing in Toronto," he shouted, insisting that residents of Canada's largest city had no reason to be afraid of the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome.

Canada is the only country outside Asia where people have died of SARS, and community officials say ethnic Chinese people have been blamed by some for spreading the disease.

Jan Wu, owner of the Golden Embassy restaurant in Chinatown East, said business had suffered terribly in the past few weeks. Her 150-seat restaurant, normally packed with lunchtime diners, had just eight customers at noon on Thursday. Reuters

Singapore puts SARS suspects on camera

China's Guangdong province.

Police and border crossing control points were alerted after the man's escape, leading to his arrest, the Chinese-language Sing Tao daily said.

SARS has so far claimed 31 deaths in Hong Kong, with nearly 1,000 people infected, a quarter of them health workers.

Hong Kong announced Thursday further measures to combat the disease by ordering all household contacts of confirmed SARS patients to confine themselves at home for up to 10 days. Violators face a maximum fine of $HK5,000 and six months' imprisonment.

In Singapore, where the number of those on home quarantine has more than doubled to 490, the government said a private security company would install Internet-linked "Webcams" in homes to ensure that people suspected of SARS infection would stay inside.

It also said an electronic wrist band designed to send a signal if anyone tried to leave their home would be imposed on offenders.

At least nine people have broken home quarantine since March 24, despite the threat of fines up to $S10,000.

Nine other people in Singapore have died of SARS. But around two-thirds of those diagnosed with SARS there have recovered.

In the United States, federal officials said Thursday SARS may have spread for the first time in a workplace there.

Dr. Julie Gerberding, head of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), said a suspected SARS patient who became ill after traveling to Asia might have infected a co-worker in Florida.

In Indonesia, health ministry spokesperson Mariani Reksoprodjo yesterday confirmed the country's first SARS case—a 47-year-old British businessman who had visited Hong Kong and Singapore before arriving in Indonesia and had been in a Jakarta hospital since April 9.

Reksoprodjo said nine other people with SARS-like symptoms were under observation.

Indonesia now joins 18 other countries that have reported SARS cases. The disease has claimed at least 111 lives worldwide and sickened more 2,700 people. China and Hong Kong, Canada, Singapore, Vietnam, Thailand and Malaysia have reported deaths, with the highest number in China and Hong Kong.

'Very new disease'

Singapore said new cases of the lethal virus rose by seven on Thursday to 133, including five who caught it at the nation's biggest hospital.

But authorities said they could have found the source of an alarming jump in cases at the Singapore General Hospital, saying a man in his 60s admitted for other medical problems but later diagnosed with SARS, might have passed it on.

"SARS is a very, very new disease and we are learning that it can present itself in very atypical ways, particularly in patients with other types of medical conditions," the Ministry of Health said.

The man had spent time previously at a hospital dealing now only with SARS victims.

In the United States, the CDC's Gerberding said she was "very concerned" about the possible spread of the disease and said the case in Gainesville, Florida, was being investigated.

A 47-year-old woman is believed to have been infected at work by a 60-year-old woman, said Tom Belcuore, director of the Alachua County health department.

The workplace spread was found during the health department's routine investigation of one worker's contacts. The health investigators discovered a co-worker who had a respiratory illness and put that person on the list of suspected SARS cases.

"It is far too early to know if any of these workers have SARS," Gerberding said.

But just in case, she said, the CDC would post new guidance regarding SARS patients for schools and the workplace.

Until now, the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome had appeared to spread only to family members or health workers who have had close contact with an infected person.

So far, a dozen people in the United States—nine family members and three health workers—had been infected in that manner. The rest of the 166 suspected cases there involve people who were infected while traveling in Asia.

Blood donations

In Canada, the federal health department announced restrictions on blood donors to prevent any SARS-tainted donations.

While saying that no evidence exists of SARS being transmitted through blood, Dr. Paul Gully said the health agency would refuse donations from people who traveled in the last 10 days to afflicted Asian nations.

Anyone who has been at one of the Toronto area hospitals under quarantine because of SARS will also be prohibited from donating blood, Gully said.

Most of Canada's 253 probable or suspected SARS cases are in Toronto, and health authorities reported 11 more probable and suspected cases Thursday.

Probable cases are those displaying symptoms who traveled recently in afflicted areas of Asia or were exposed to the illness. Suspected cases are those displaying symptoms, but with no known travel or exposure history.

On Wednesday, Toronto and Ontario province health officials closed a school and advised almost 200 people to go into a 10-day quarantine because of possible exposure from people who failed to isolate themselves as instructed.

The quarantine is for anyone possibly exposed to the illness, and thousands of people in Toronto have been advised to observe it since SARS first appeared almost a month ago.

BUHAIN CONCERN NSAs warned on SARS

By Marc Anthony Reyes

PHILIPPINE Sports Commission chair Eric Buhain yesterday said he will recommend to the national sports associations to postpone their participation in countries that have cases of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS).

"The PSC doesn't want to take chances when it comes to the health of some 300 national athletes," Buhain told the INQUIRER.

Though he didn't give any figures, the PSC chief said national teams go out to compete abroad almost every week.

China, Singapore, Hong Kong and Vietnam, the site of the Southeast Asian Games in December.

"It will have an effect on our preparation for the Vietnam SEA Games, but we can always compete in some other countries which have about the same level of competition," said Buhain.

Philippine Olympic Committee president Celso Dayrit said the SARS issue will be tackled on April 25 when the SEA Games Federation convenes in Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam.

"I don't know if it's pushing through and if other countries are willing to attend," said Dayrit, considering that Vietnam has several SARS cases. "But I just might attend if needed be."

Buhain said he is hoping things will improve between now and the SEA Games which is slated Dec. 5-15.

"Surely it would have a big effect on the SEA Games if they still don't develop a vaccine for SARS until December," said Buhain.

Buhain said PSC's concern is always for "the safety of the national athletes."

"It would be very frustrating for the athletes which have been training very hard for the past year," said Buhain. "It's only 238 days to go before SEA Games, and most of them are already on the peak of their preparation."

The country has already scrapped several stints in Singapore and Hong Kong due to SARS scare. With a report from Elaine Lou Antonio

AMSTERDAM—Two Chinese runners have been asked to pull out of Sunday's Rotterdam marathon over concerns about the spread of the deadly flu-like SARS virus which originated in China, race organizers said on Tuesday. There was no suggestion that either Sun Yingjie or fellow runner Jin-Li were infected with the virus, race director Mario Kadika said, but the decision had been made to avert potential unease among entries.

Bajar shines as Shell snaps eight-game skid

5 p.m.—Coca-Cola vs Talk N Text

By June Navarro

PLAYING second fiddle on Shell's rotation motivates Rensy Bajar to push his potentials to the limit.

Bajar's hardwork reaped dividends for Shell last night as the Turbochargers beat Purefoods, 68-65. Shell, thus, snapped its eight-game skid in the Samsung-PBA All Filipino Cup at the Makati Coliseum.

Ranged against the 6-foot Noy Castillo, the 5-foot-7 Bajar drilled in 10 of his 14 points in the final period, including a three-point play and a key triple that altered the misfortunes of the Turbochargers.

The Turbochargers improved to 2-8 while the Hotdogs dropped to 4-10.

Later, San Miguel Beer scrambled past Sta.

Lucia Realty, 80-77, in overtime to pick up its fifth win in nine games. The Realtors dropped to 5-5.

Lakers, Sixers win

4 p.m.—John O vs Hapee

By Dennis U. Eroa

JOHN O mentor Dong Vergere thinks he has the formula to bring Hapee Toothpaste crash ing back to earth in the Sunkist-PBL Unity Cup at the San Juan Gym.

"We have a chance if we can clip Hapee's wings," Vergere, assistant coach of the national men's basketball team, told the INQUIRER. Vergere said they must stop Hapee shooters Peter June Simon, Allan Salangsang, Mark Saquilayan and Wesley Gonzales.

Riding high on a five-game winning streak, Hapee meets John O (3-1) at 4 p.m. today. The clash will feature two teams with impressive rosters under two bench strategists known for their focus on defense.

ICTSI-Archers, the league's glamor squad, tackles Montaña in the 2 p.m. opener.

Despite a not-so strong lineup, the Archers are getting the respect of the fans with their spirited plays. Dino Aldeguer, Mark Cardona, Joachim Toss and Dominic Uy are playing well for ICTSI.

Coach Franz Pumaren's charges narrowly lost, 61-60, to Bu Star Power on April 6 and are determined to bounce back.

Blu Boys bat for glory as RP hosts Asian softball

By Dennis U. Eroa

THE COUNTRY'S bid to recapture its lost glory in softball gets a new start as the Blu Boys and Girls fight for honors in the Asian championships from May 31 to June 7 at three Metro Manila venues.

"We will give the traditional powers in the region a good fight and try to regain our lofty place in Asian softball," said Manila Representative and Amateur Softball Association of the Philippines president Harry Angping during yesterday's launching at the Manila Pavilion.

Despite the SARS outbreak, Angping said 19 nations, including Hong Kong and China, will compete in the 7th men's and 8th women's championships.

"Attendance is confirmed. Fans are going to witness high-caliber matches with the lineup of teams," said Angping.

Also present during the launching were POC president Celso Dayrit, Softball Council of Asia Secretary General Low Beng Choo, baseball great Reynaldo Manzanares and Roberto Iturralde, mentors of the Blu Boys and Girls, respectively, and project director Salvador Salacup.

"We have a good shot at the title," said Manzanares. The Blu Boys won the 1968, 1974 and 1990 Asian Championships, while the Blu Girls topped the 1972 event.

Other teams competing in the men's division are titlist Japan, Chinese-Taipei, Malaysia, Indonesia, Thailand, India and Iran.

China will defend its title in the women's side also composed of South Korea, Iran, Thailand, Indonesia, Chinese-Taipei and India.

The championship games will be held at the Rizal Memorial Stadium while Manila Polo Club and the Rosario Sports Complex in Pasig City will host the eliminations.

Manila trackster captures 5 golds

By Marc Anthony Reyes

ANTONIO Mendenilla, 15, loved to run as a kid growing in the busy streets of Manila.

He has carried that passion all the way to five gold medals to emerge as one of the prized finds in yesterday's track and field competitions of the Manila Youth Games.

Mendenilla, an incoming high school freshman at the Philippine Christian University, turned the Rizal Memorial oval into his own playground, running away with the gold medal in the 200-meter dash to increase his collection to five.

"I was very active as a kid and I love playing habulan with my neighbors," said Mendenilla, who has also won the 100m, long jump, high jump and led the PCU relay team to the 4x100m title.

MYG organizer Ali Atienza, chief of the Manila Sports Council, said Mendenilla is only one of the many new faces who will represent the city in national-level competitions.

Sharing the recognition with Mendenilla in the last day of athletics competitions were Analyn Roca of Aurora Quezon Elementary School and Joy Regillas of Dr. Albert Elementary School, who also won five gold medals each.

Also turning in multiple gold-medal performances was Daryl Ceballos of Dr. Albert Elementary School. He ruled the 50m dash for 12-year-olds and under, for his fourth gold after capturing the 100m, 200m and 400m in his category.

Twelve-year-old Regillas, also from DAES, likewise snatched her fifth gold medal yesterday, winning the 200m and leading her team to the 4x400m. She won the baseball throw 50m and 100m Thursday. With a report from Elaine Lou Antonio

Price of pride

SPECTATOR

Al S. Mendoza

I know of some who love to shun the national team like the SARS plague not for lack of interest but for lack of bucks colored green being thrust into their pockets. Some of them still roam the vicinity of the PBA backyard; one of them has the talent to become great. However, the possibility of greatness has been, is still being, impeded by his lust for dough more than "do it, bebe."

The fear of accident has become the overriding factor among athletes hesitant to join battles overseas. That fear, alas, can only be effectively killed with wads of bills. Too much worship of the good things in life is what gnaws away at an athlete's desire for

Thus one, coming from an athlete who struck a jackpot of a contract, tells it all: "After I got the million, I rolled over and went to sleep."

Some do it for pride, the rest money.

Joel Banal will start today as the head coach of Talk N' Text, replacing American John Woolpert. For Joel, TNT's erstwhile assistant coach, it will be a temporary job as he has a contract to fulfill as head coach of Ateneo in the UAAP season starting in July. Joel and the Blue Eagles have the tough job of repeating as UAAP champions this year after scoring their classic victory last year over arch-rival De La Salle. The rumor mill says Bill Bayno might take over when Joel starts to sit at the Ateneo from July to October for this year's UAAP season.

Different folks, different strokes. New coach, new stroke. Here's a glass to you, Joel.

JOHN Lardner, a sportswriter attempting at poetry, wrote in defense of professional athletes:

"Right or wrong, is all the same,
When baby needs new shoes.
It isn't how you play the game,
It's whether you win or lose."

Roger Kahn, one of the best sportswriters America has produced, said those lines "are remembered by five people." He did not identify them; neither did he state their gender nor station in life. But Kahn wrote: "The pros wanted poetry, marching bands, pompom girls." And yet, "Society conditioned us to believe in the beauties of amateurism."

Not anymore. Sports today is big time business. It is spelled m-o-n-e-y.

Whereas before when a pair of shoes was enough incentive for a player to aspire for a spot in the national quintet, sadly, that is not so anymore these days.

The color of money has become the chief consideration for the donning of national colors. Make that greenback. Almighty dollar.

FUTURE TIGER

Tabuena tops Sarawak meet

By Jong Arcano

AMID chants of "Tiger, Tiger, Tiger" from the foreign gallery circling the 18th green, eight-year-old Miguel Tabuena completed a stunning victory in the Sarawak Junior World Masters Golf Championship recently at the Damai Golf and Country Club in Kuching, Malaysia.

Tabuena neutralized the power of Malaysian defending champion Leonard Chin, who stood almost twice taller and bigger, with his well rounded game as he knocked in three consecutive birdies in a final round effort of four-over par 62 to prevail in Class E with plenty to spare.

The winning margin was 14 strokes after Tabuena's previous rounds of 67 and 66. But what made Tabuena's first major conquest abroad very impressive was the way he outscored not just his Class E competitors but also those in Class D (9-10 years).

Tabuena had caused a stir from the start and by the time his mission was successfully over, everybody was already calling him a "future Tiger" in reference to the golf icon who failed to get his bid for a third Masters crown in Augusta going due to a storm.

Anthony See, the only other RP entry aside from Tabuena, claimed the runner-up trophy in Class D.

With Tabuena's sensational victory, the Philippines continued to firm up its status as a source of jungolf talents. Dottie Ardina is now considered as one of the world's best after winning the Junior World in San Diego and the US Kids in Virginia last year.

The Sarawak tourney drew about 200 jungolfers from 13 countries, a huge turnout despite the dreaded SARS epidemic and the war in Iraq. For the same reasons, the Asia-Pacific Junior Championships in Jakarta, Indonesia set late this month were cancelled.

"Miguel was really bent on going to Malaysia no matter what. It's probably the desire to compete despite the reasons for worry that drove him to play really well," said Miguel's father Luigi.

Gerry Handog, president of the Jungolf Foundation of the Philippines, said Tabuena's victory is, indeed, a shot in the arm for local jungolf.

"Miguel is living up to his promise as a future golf hero for the country. We share with his family and the whole country, the pride and joy of this shining achievement," said Handog.

Tabuena, who goes to the International School and plays out of Alabang and Sta. Elena, started to play golf at age two and was even featured in a television commercial for a milk product showcasing his golf talent at a very young age.

The tournament was organized by Ministry of Social Development and Urbanization, Ministry of Tourism, Sarawak Junior Golf Foundation, and the Malaysian Golf Association.

ERNIE Els of South Africa talks to the media outside the clubhouse at Augusta National Golf Club in Augusta, Georgia, where the first round of golf has been cancelled for the day. This is the first time since 1983 that a round of golf has been cancelled and the first time since 1939 that the opener was called off.

Mother Nature cancels opener

AUGUSTA, Georgia—Golf legend Jack Nicklaus sloshed through mud outside the Augusta National clubhouse, seemingly oblivious to the biting breeze, the chilling drizzle, the total lack of anyone else on the putting green.

"Ah, what a beautiful day," he joked, pulling out three balls for some last-minute Masters practice. Thursday was a day for staying inside after another wave of showers turned golf's hallowed grounds into a muddy mess, forcing the first round to be called off without a shot being struck.

They'll be back Friday (Saturday in Manila), Tiger Woods and the rest of the 93-man field, hoping to play a grueling 36 holes and get the first major of the year back on schedule.

Nicklaus arrived at the course in the morning, only to get word that no golf would be played. He went back home for a while, but couldn't stay away.

"I didn't have anything else to do," the six-time Masters champion said. "So I figured I would go do some putting and chipping."

Indeed, while Augusta National has been trying to stave off Martha Burk and her protests against the all-male membership, there was nothing the exclusive club could do about another woman, Mother Nature.

For the first time since 1939, the opening round was postponed by rain.

"I'd like to see something good happen here because of all the negative press," David Tomis said. "But we don't play in a dome."

A dome would have come in handy this week. It's been raining since Sunday, knocking out one entire day of practice and cutting short the popular Par 3 Tournament.

Even so, some 30,000 fans showed up Thursday, ready to see some golf. They walked gingerly through the mud, but their shoes and pants were still splattered. AP

Leongson eyes back-to-back win in Guam

TO win the 2003 Guam Smokin' Wheel motocross championship for the second straight year will be Ernie Leongson's aim when he competes in the prestigious motocross event this weekend.

Leongson, a two-time national motocross titlist, will try to become the first-ever back-to-back winner in the centerpiece pro open category in the event being held under the auspices of the Federation Internationale de Motocycliste (FIM).

The multi-awarded campaigner from Taytay, Rizal, who is being supported by Shell Advance and Nork's-Yamaha, will pit riding skills against the equally-talented riders from Guam, Saipan, Japan and several other Southeast Asian countries.

Leongson will be accompanied by National Motorcycle Sports and Safety Association (Namssa) secretary-general Macky Carapier during the two-day competition organized by the Guam Motocross Federation.

SBC Red Cubs clinch crown as Arao shines

By Roy Luanca

CLAIFORD Arao stood out as the San Beda Red Cubs added the Sunkist Youth Basketball Championship to their collection of crowns yesterday.

The 6-foot-5 Arao wound up with 23 points and 13 rebounds to power the Red Cubs past the UP Integrated School Preps, 61-56, in the thrilling final at the Makati Coliseum.

With Arao virtually unstoppable inside, NCAA champion San Beda controlled the boards, 26-15, and proved more cohesive than its UAAP counterpart with more assists (19-16) and steals (10-6).

Just 18 years old, the Ateneo-bound Arao earned MVP honors. He was joined in the mythical five by teammates Roel Escudra, a member of the 2002 RP Youth, and Joseph Casio and UPIS standouts Marvin Cruz and Jacob Manlapaz.

Their eighth straight title this year under Coach Ato Badolato was worth P75,000 for the Fila-outfitted Red Cubs, also the reigning national inter-secondary champions.

Faith Academy clawed back from a 41-36 halftime deficit to subdue San Sebastian College, 73-69, and clinch third place.

"It was a good fight and we're really proud of the boys. They played with the hearts of champions," said co-team managers Dilp Budhrani and Rajan Gidwani.

'Wow Mali!' prank not funny at all for injured teacher

By Alcuin Papa

THE JOKE now appears to be on the producers of the gag show "Wow Mali" when the prank they pulled on schoolteacher Josephine Basit backfired, resulting in serious physical injuries.

Basit, a mother of two and a teacher at the San Antonio Elementary School on Roosevelt Avenue in Quezon City, on Thursday twisted her ankle and ended up in a cast after the producers of the gag show, which is aired on ABC-5, set her up to film her reaction to a scary situation.

Basit yesterday said in an interview that she and her family are studying the possibility of filing charges against the producers.

ABC-5 vice president for corporate affairs Terra Daffon yesterday told the Inquirer they have reached an agreement with Basit and her husband.

"We have made an amicable settlement," Daffon said. "For all the trouble and loss of income, we will compensate her for the two weeks that she won't be able to go to work."

Daffon said that in the four years "Wow Mali" has been airing on TV, this was only the fourth time that a problem with a subject has cropped up.

"(Wow Mali) is a gag show," Daffon said. "One untoward incident a year is not bad at all. We make it a point to iron out any problem we have with any subject who complains about the show."

Basit, a regular customer of Bloom Hair Salon on Roosevelt Avenue, decided to have a haircut there on Thursday afternoon. One of the salon's attendants led her to the second floor where she was told she would get a free massage.

"It was empty and quiet inside," Basit said. "Immediately, I sensed there was something going on."

The attendant told her to lie down. She was also told she had to be blindfolded. She then heard a voice say, "Simulan na natin ang dasal (Let us start the prayer now)."

Surprised, she took off the blindfold and saw five people in black masks. Terrified, she ran to the stairs but she tripped and tumbled down the stairs, spraining her left ankle.

The production people of the show took her to the JP Sison General Hospital where doctors treated her injury and put her leg in a cast. They then took Basit to her husband at the administrative department of Camp Karinagal.

When the Inquirer talked to Basit yesterday, her left ankle was still in a cast. She said she has to use crutches and to take a two-week leave from work.

"The doctor said it was a severe sprain and that there were torn ligaments," she said. "Last night, I couldn't sleep well. I keep seeing their masked faces whenever I close my eyes."

"They told me it was not their intention to hurt me," she added, referring to the show's producers.

"But I argued that they planned to scare me and film my reaction for their show. And I scare very easily."

"They also told me that this was the first time anyone was hurt because of what they do. But I don't believe them. What they did to me was terrible."

Basit called for the cancellation of the show.

"They shouldn't make jokes at the expense of someone else," she said.

Baladjay wants to do an Erap

By Leila B. Sabaverria

PYRAMID scam suspect Rosario "Rose" Baladjay wants to do an Erap.

Like the former President, Baladjay, who has been detained at the Makati City Jail after the Senate turned her over to police last March, is seeking confinement in a hospital for her alleged medical complaints—a lump in her neck and an increase in her heartbeat.

In a hearing yesterday before Judge Salvador Abad-Santos of Branch 143 of the Makati Regional Trial Court, Baladjay's lawyers asked the court to allow her hospitalization for a series of tests and treatments for her symptoms.

Baladjay was present in the hearing. She arrived in court at 9 a.m. yesterday wearing a white jacket and brown pants, but without her usual heavy makeup.

Some of the complainants in her case were also present.

Pulmonary specialist Dr. Jose Lopez David, who examined Baladjay on April 1, had recommended her transfer to a hospital for tests. He said a biopsy was needed to determine if the circular mass in her neck is a cancerous growth.

He also noted that when he examined Baladjay, her pulse rate was 97 beats per minute. David said this could be due to stress, hormonal imbalance, anxiety, depression, pollution or her environment. But her blood pressure was normal at 120/70, he added.

Bureau of Jail Management and Penology medical officer Dr. Eden Cahilig said that when she examined Baladjay, the suspect had a rapid heart rate of 106 beats per minute. Cahilig also confirmed that there is a lump in Baladjay's neck.

The prosecution argued that the tests on Baladjay could be done inside the Makati City Jail.

But David said the Makati city jail is "too dirty" and that no doctor would dare conduct a blood test there.

Judge Abad Santos said Baladjay could be brought to the warden's office for the tests. But David said special equipment is needed for the tests.

The complainants' lawyers said a government doctor should examine Baladjay for another opinion.

They also noted that the complainants are also suffering from the same symptoms—anxiety and shortness of breath—during the case hearings, alluding to the possible cause of Baladjay's increased heartbeat.

But the judge gave no order after the hour-long hearing.

Baladjay's lawyer H. de la Cruz, however, said in an interview that she would file a motion urging the judge to rule on the matter before the judge goes on leave for health reasons and his workload.

Clave said there is no need for a government doctor to examine Baladjay because the BJMP medical officer is a government doctor.

Baladjay was arrested last March 11 for allegedly defrauding hundreds of people who had invested millions of pesos in her Multitel Investment company.

Mindoro solon's chief of staff slain

By Alcuin Papa

A NEPHEW of Occidental Mindoro Rep. Josephine Ramirez-Sato, who was also her chief of staff, was robbed and killed in Quezon City on his way to work yesterday morning.

Marvin Jay Ramirez, 31, of Ramax Subdivision, Mapayapa Village 3, Barangay Pasong Tamo, Quezon City, was on his way to work at the House of Representatives when four still unidentified suspects waylaid him at about 7:45 a.m.

According to the investigation of PO2 Edwin de la Cruz of the Central Police District Criminal Investigation Unit, Ramirez had just alighted from a tricycle near the BPI Family Bank branch at the corner of Holy Spirit Drive and De Leon Street in Barangay Holy Spirit, also in Quezon City, when he was attacked.

One of the four suspects fired a single shot at the head of Ramirez, police said. Another suspect stabbed him in the right side of the body.

When Ramirez fell to the ground, his attackers took his cell phone, wallet and knapsack, according to the investigator.

The suspects then commandeered a tricycle and escaped, the investigator said.

De la Cruz said the most probable motive for the killing was robbery.

But he added that police have not ruled out other motives as the investigation continues.

I miss the martial law days

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo's popularity ratings have gone down considerably—negative 14—because of her decision to have the country part of the so-called "coalition of the willing."

The President should take consolation in the fact that great leaders in history made unpopular decisions that turned out to be wise on hindsight.

Her decision to have the country counted as one of the "hawks" in the Iraq controversy has turned out to be the right one.

I hate to say this but history is written by the victors and not by the vanquished. Had Iraq won the war, things would have been different. Saddam Hussein would have been hailed a hero.

But Iraq has fallen and Saddam Hussein's unbelievable cruelty toward his subjects exposed.

GMA's decision has been vindicated.

The mark of a great leader is being able to take the consequences of his or her decision.

GMA knew most of her countrymen were opposed to the Iraq war; but she nevertheless went on to have the country support the US-British coalition.

On that score, GMA has the

ON TARGET

makings of a great leader.

There's a saying, it's a lonely place at the top. A leader who doesn't know that has no business being at the top. The No. 1 trait of a great leader is making difficult and unpopular decisions that he thinks will, in the long run, benefit his countrymen.

Prisons Director Ricardo Macala has reportedly ordered "surprise inspections" of the cell of ex-Mayor Rey Yap of Sapang Dalaga, Misamis Occidental.

According to the Philippine National Police, Yap had managed by remote control a syndicate printing counterfeit money in his town and distributing it in Metro Manila.

Yap and his brother Roy are serving a life sentence for the murder of mayoral candidate Victorio Cebedo in 1992.

Macala's order to have Yap's cell subjected to surprise inspection was just a put-on. He would not have made that order had the police not exposed Yap's hand in the printing of bogus bills in his hometown. Yap was able to run his syndicate using his cellular phone.

Macala allows inmates at the National Bilibid Prisons' maximum security compound to have cellular phones in their cells. In fact, he sold them those cell phones.

This column has exposed Macala's illegal practice selling cell phones to rich inmates. But it seems that my exposé became a voice in the wilderness.

To the people who should have acted on my exposé on Macala: Are you guys deaf? Or were you bribed?

It seems everybody in this and previous administrations has become callous or deaf to irregularities exposed in media.

This is not a brief for the Marcos dictatorship but I miss those times because irregularities this columnist exposed were immediately acted upon. Government officials concerned investigated the allegations made in media even if there was, supposedly, suppression of press freedom.

chine was in fact a wood slicing equipment which was made to look like a machine for manufacturing fake bills.

"We can only suspect who's behind all this," Reyno said in a phone interview.

"Clearly, this is nothing but pure harassment," he added.

He accused the head of the National Capital Region Police Office, Deputy Director General Reynaldo Velasco, of being over eager in pinning down his family.

Not only were investigations made of the exposés, action was taken. Corrupt government officials and employees who were exposed were dismissed after reports about them were found to be true.

I really miss the martial law days insofar as swift action by the martial law government on exposés in media was concerned.

(However, I hasten to add that media could not expose the irregularities committed by Marcos and Imelda and their close relatives).

I remember I exposed the massive corruption and inefficiency of the members of Station 5 of the Western Police District (WPD).

A week after my exposé was published in my column, "Police News Roundup," in the Manila Bulletin, Mr. Marcos personally ordered the relief of the entire complement of Station 5, from the lowest-ranking patrolman to its station commander.

Does democracy mean being deaf or callous to the people's cry for help?

Call Marcos names. But he certainly was sensitive to the people's pulse until he became gravely ill and was no longer in control of the government.

"Why is he so interested in us," Reyno asked. "He's in charge only of Metro Manila but he ordered his men to conduct the raid in Sapang Dalaga. If he wants to become PNP chief, he shouldn't do it at our expense."

Velasco had also ordered the raid of Yap's cell at the New Bilibid Prisons in Muntinlupa last Feb 5.

Police and prison guards reportedly found about P300,000 in counterfeit bills and communication equipment in Yap's cell.

Last March 23, Velasco's men raided the Yap home in Sapang Dalaga but found no prohibited items, according to Reyno.

Parañaque judge faces administrative raps over land auction

By Christian Esguerra

THE PUBLIC Estates Authority is going after the Parañaque judge who had junked their court petition and paved the way for the auction of the 287-hectare PEA property last Monday.

The Office of the Solicitor General is poised to file administrative charges against Judge Aldo Estrelito Macapagal for an alleged oversight in her ruling, according to PEA General Manager Teodorico Taguinod.

As of Thursday, three days after the auction, PEA officials had not yet received a copy of the decision that supposedly denied their request for a temporary restraining order, Taguinod said.

Mayor Joey Marquez held the auction to pressure PEA to pay its real property tax of P267 million that has accumulated since 2000.

Taguinod maintained that the pieces of property were exempt from realty taxes because they were reclaimed lands. "Besides, (they) are devoted (to) public use and public service," he said. "Thus, the imposition of real property taxes thereon is highly questionable."

Gov't seen to sustain rise in revenue collection

By Clarissa S. Batino

REVENUE collection, particularly by the Bureau of Customs, continued to sustain its healthy trend in April, boosting the government's bid to contain the budget deficit within the P202-billion ceiling this year.

After exceeding its first quarter target by P4.3 billion, the Customs said collection from April 1 to 9 already exceeded the month-to-date target by P228 million.

The Customs collects almost 20 percent of the government's annual revenues while the Bureau of Internal Revenue accounts for about 80 percent.

Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho believed the upward trend in revenue collection could be sustained. He said the P131.3-billion collection target in the first quarter was substantially exceeded.

From January to April 9, the Customs collected P29.582 billion, higher by 17.9 percent or P4.498 billion than the target of P25.085 billion.

Compared with the previous year's level, Customs Commissioner Antonio Bernardo said the collection was 26.7 percent or P6.236 billion more than the P23.346 billion collection in the same period in 2002.

Preliminary numbers showed that while revenue collection in the first three months reached more than P138 billion or about P6.5 billion more than the target of P131.94 billion, spending exceeded the P137.116-billion target.

The government reportedly exceeded its P55.2-billion deficit target in the first three months.

Camacho said improving revenue collection should help the government contain the fiscal gap in the coming months. The government must contain the budget deficit to P202 billion this year from P210.7 billion in 2002.

Negros starts cattle fattening project

By Carla P. Gomez
PDI Visayas Bureau

BACOLOD CITY—A joint venture with the Australian Northern Territory set to start this year aims to create a cattle industry in Negros Occidental that will alleviate the poverty situation of the farm sector here.

This was disclosed recently by Paul Henderson, Trade Minister of the Australian Northern Territory, and Negros Occidental Rep. Alfredo Maranon, House committee chair on agriculture.

Henderson said young cattle from his country would be shipped to Negros Occidental for fattening to add 25 percent more value to each cow before going to the abattoir.

This means that, by the time the cattle is fattened, a farmer will earn 150 to 200 Australian dollars (P4,860 to P6,480) more per cow that arrives, Henderson said.

"This will be massive infusion of money into your local economy and for your farmers," he said.

"What we are trying to do is establish trade that has real value for farmers here in the Philippines as well as for the cattle producers in northern Australia," he added.

Henderson said it would be a "win-win" trading relationship because the meat from the cattle would be both sold locally and exported.

Henderson said they were hoping that the first shipment of 1,200 cattle would arrive this month.

Weak demand to hit economy

years, putting a drag on government efforts to stimulate the domestic economy.

The government is aiming to peg the deficit at between 4.6 to 4.7 percent of GDP this year, or around P202 billion, after racking up a shortfall of P212.68 billion last year, or 5.6 percent of GDP.

The 2002 trade data is set to be adjusted this month after the government earlier revised the 2000 and 2001 figures to take into account under-reporting of imports. Few economists were willing to make projections for 2003 and 2004, preferring to wait for the restatement of the 2002 data.

Economists were hopeful that the impact of the war and the outbreak of a flu-like disease in the region would be minimal.

OPENING communication lines in the uplands.

Smart puts up cell sites in Banaue

TOURISTS no longer have to wait for their pictures to be developed or until they can get to a phone to share with friends and family the experience of standing before the world-renowned Banaue Rice Terraces.

Smart Communications Inc. recently activated a cell site in Banaue, one of the 11 towns in the province of Ifugao. This forms part of the company's program to install GSM cell sites in upland barangays, which is in line with the government's thrust to provide telephone lines in remote and far-flung areas.

The convenience of being just a phone call away from home will also please tourists who flock to this town to view the agricultural feat that was declared in 1998 by the American Society of Civil Engineers as the eighth engineering wonder of the world and inscribed by the Unesco World Heritage list as a living cultural landscape.

The Ifugaos had painstakingly carved out the tiers of rice fields from the mountainside with their bare hands for over 3,000 years to create the Banaue Rice Terraces.

The influx of tourists caused Banaue to shift from agriculture to tourism-related livelihood such as the mass production of wood carvings and the establishment of lodgings and restaurants. Thus, the presence of Smart's GSM cell site is expected to boost commerce and tourism in the area.

Hotel and restaurant operators will find it easier to receive bookings and place orders for guest essentials. Wood carvers, metal smiths, weavers and other craft manufacturers will now also find markets more accessible.

Smart also powered a cell site in the neighboring province of Benguet to serve the needs of residents of Mankayan, the "copper town of Benguet" and site of Lepanto Mines.

Arroyo kin seen heading new board, as PSE forces election

By Elena R. Torrijos

AVOIDING a takeover by the Securities and Exchange Commission, stockholders of the Philippine Stock Exchange elected yesterday a new 15-man board.

The stock exchange gathered enough stockholders and proxies to call to order its annual stockholders' meeting despite objections by erstwhile opposition candidates who questioned the definition of a quorum.

"I trust these highly competent and enthusiastic people will lead the PSE to its rebirth in an atmosphere of cooperation," PSE chair Vivian Yuchengco said.

Yuchengco underscored the need to find new institutional partners, attract more listed companies and continuously educate the public about the benefits of investing in equities rather than in pyramid schemes.

One of the brokers elected to the board was Alicia Arroyo, sister-in-law of President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Also elected were brokers Joseph Madrid, William Ang, Gregorio Kilayko, Timothy Myron Papa and Maria Limlingan.

The four non-brokers elected to the board were lawyer Francis Lim, The Insular Life Assurance Co. Ltd. chief executive Vicente Ayllon, San Miguel Corp. president Ramon Ang and WG&A Philippines president Enrique Aboutz.

They join incumbent PSE directors Cayetano Paderanga, Peter Pavila and Tomas Apacible and PSE president Ernest Leung—all appointed by the Securities and Exchange Commission—in serving as non-broker independent directors in the PSE board.

The PSE election was supposed to have been held last Saturday, but it had to be moved because of a lack of quorum that resulted from a boycott spearheaded by erstwhile opposition broker Florentino Francisco.

Francisco was earlier vying for PSE chair and led a slate of brokers against Arroyo's group.

The lack of quorum prompted the SEC to decide to form an oversight committee that would look over the workings of the stock exchange in case it failed to elect a board by April 15.

Francisco's group has been strongly pushing for the election of non-brokers through free balloting.

Non-brokers were crucial in the election of the PSE chair last year.

Under the rules drafted by the PSE elections committee chaired by SEC director Jose Aquino, four of the eight non-broker seats representing sectoral interests (issuer, market participant and investor) will be subjected to free elections, but the remaining four independent directors will be appointed by the committee.

Francisco's group boycotted the election to protest these rules.

Stocks end higher, driven by telecom firms

STOCKS ended higher yesterday driven by sharp gains in telecom stocks led by dominant carrier PLDT on expectations of solid growth in the first quarter, analysts said.

The Philippine main index rose 0.88 percent to close at 1,122.27. On the week, the market gained 2.9 percent and has so far been up 10.2 percent this year.

"Philippine telecoms' 2002 results were superb. They outdid market expectations paving the way for a strong outlook for the year," said AB Capital economic analyst Jose Vistan.

"And based on latest reports from the National Telecommunications Commission, the penetration rate for mobile phone was still below 20 percent, meaning there's still room for growth."

Value turnover rose to P384.10 million from Thursday's P375.86 million. Gainers outclassed losers 36 to 25 and there were 38 stocks unchanged.

Analysts said sentiment was also boosted by news that the International Monetary Fund (IMF) upgraded the country's growth forecast to 4 percent from 3.8 percent. The IMF said the telecom sector appeared to be poised for another strong year.

"This raised hopes for a favorable decision by Calpers which is expected by April 15," Vistan said.

The board of Calpers, the California Public Employees' Retirement System which handles around $131 billion in funds, will meet on April 15 to consider various proposals whether to keep its investments in emerging markets, including the Philippines.

Vistan expected some minor profit-taking next week before the market closes on Thursday and Friday for Easter holidays.

"It's a short-trading week next week so we expect the market to consolidate and we see profit taking. The market is overbought and it has to consolidate its gains before making another rally," said Vistan who saw market support at 1,100 to 1,110 and resistance at 1,170.

PLDT, the country's largest telephone firm and a quarter owned by Hong Kong conglomerate First Pacific Co. Ltd., rose 4.93 percent or P17.5 to P372.5.

Second ranked Globe Telecom—which is jointly owned by conglomerate Ayala Corp., SunTel and Deutsche Telekom—gained 4.84 percent or P30 to end at P318.

Investors however continued to dump shares of the country's top electricity distributor Manila Electric Co. (Meralco) after the Supreme Court on Thursday upheld an earlier ruling that it had over billed customers for years and must give them refunds.

The firm had earlier warned that it might post a loss in 2002 and said a large refund, reportedly over $500 million, would put it in jeopardy of defaulting on debt payments due this year.

The B-shares of Meralco which are open to foreigners, dropped 8 percent or P1 to P11.50. Reuters

Even tax cheats have rights, BIR officials stress

By Michelle V. Remo

REVENUE officials said yesterday the Bureau of Internal Revenue would have to observe due process in prosecuting individuals or companies suspected of tax fraud.

In an interview, BIR Deputy Commissioner for Legal Affairs Jose Mario Buñag said the BIR was serious in its efforts to deal with tax fraud so that it can help improve the government's cash position.

Buñag stressed, however, that the BIR would have to pursue its campaign while observing the rights of the individuals or companies involved.

He said establishments found to have committed tax violations were only subject to penalties the first and second instances of the offense.

They will only be shut down on the third offense, Buñag said.

"The BIR is doing the best it can to go after erring establishments, but due process has to be followed," Buñag said.

The BIR was challenged earlier to prosecute establishments that it found to have violated tax rules during its tax compliance saturation drives.

Senate Majority Leader Loren Legarda was one of those who urged the BIR to prosecute the establishments caught during BIR's saturation drive.

The April 2 drive covered big fast food chains like Max's Restaurant, Pizza Hut, Tropical Hut and Hamburger.

Outlets of these fast-food chains along Doña Soledad Avenue in Parañaque were found to have violated some of the country's tax laws.

"The BIR tax mapping drive is not a mere fanfare, as results are there to prove the bureau is serious in its campaign," BIR district director Danilo Duncano, who led a team that went on the saturation drive, said.

According to Buñag, once the BIR finds one establishment to be violating tax rules, a report is immediately submitted to the concerned BIR district office that, in turn, will turn in the report to the BIR main office if the violation is not settled.

Ayala Land, Metro Pac still unable to close deal

By Elena R. Torrijos

METRO Pacific Corp. said yesterday it would take 15 more days, or until April 17 this year, for it to close a deal that would give Ayala Land Inc. and the Campos family 50.4 percent of Bonifacio Land Corp.

"There are no stumbling blocks to the transaction. It's just that this is highly complicated, and the conditions precedent are quite numerous," Metro Pacific vice president David Nugent said in an interview.

Nugent said the two sides were still working on the final documentation of related transactions and on obtaining certain government approvals and third-party consents.

In November last year, Ayala Land and the Campos' Evergreen Holdings Inc. agreed to allow Metro Pacific, local holding firm of Hong Kong's First Pacific Co. Ltd., to use its 50.3-percent stake in Bonifacio Land to pay for a $90-million loan that the Ayala-Campos group would assume from Larouge BV.

In a statement yesterday, Metro Pacific said the extension of the assignment of the outstanding loan from Larouge to Ayala Land and Evergreen had been "mutually and amicably agreed upon by all parties concerned."

As soon as an agreement is closed, Metro Pacific will be left with a 23.5-percent stake in Bonifacio Land. It will also get 10.4 hectares at the Fort Bonifacio area.

The property will represent payment for P3.2 billion advanced by Metro Pacific to develop the Bonifacio Global City.

Ayala water firm says to pass '02 net

MANILA Water Company Inc. has expressed confidence it will surpass its financial performance last year, as it continues to improve its system connections and deliver more water to customers in Metro Manila's eastern zone.

Company officials said yesterday Manila Water would be able to chalk up a net income higher than 2002's P553 million by year's end.

"We expect to do better this year, as we have already booked financial losses related to the peso depreciation in the last five years," Manila Water chief financial officer and treasurer Sherisa Nuesa said in a news conference.

In an interview, Manila Water president Antonino Aquino said a further reduction in Manila Water's systems losses could be converted into bigger water volumes delivered to customers.

The Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage System-Regulatory Office has allowed Manila Water to increase its rates by P14 per cubic meter effective January.

Nenaco sees P12M from new scheme

By Abigail L. Ho

NEGROS Navigation Co. Inc., a subsidiary of property developer Metro Pacific Corp., said yesterday it expected to earn at least P12 million a year from its scheme to use unused vessel space for loose cargo.

In a statement, the company said it was now in the final stages of completing its "LCL (loose cargo loading) Express Cargo Onboard" project.

Nenaco said it was hoping that with this scheme, companies would continue using ships to move their goods.

Most local shippers in ports with less sailing frequency had begun shifting to airfreight to move their goods because it usually takes weeks to fill up a container before it can be loaded into vessels.

"With the new LCL Express Cargo Onboard, the consignee can immediately withdraw the cargo as soon as the vessel reaches the port. The project will reduce clearing time from an average of six hours to only about one hour," Nenaco said.

The LCL Express Cargo Onboard is designed for high revenue-yielding cargoes that are charged at premium levels because of their nature, it said.

These cargoes are those that fall under the "Class A classified" category, which are kept in identified secured slots within a vessel.

The new scheme is seen to be in full swing by next month for outbound cargo shipment.

Lead proponents for the project are the people behind the Nenaco Freight Power think tank team, including vice president for national freight Gery Enciso, freight booking office assistant vice president Fred Pajo and freight sales manager Jun Manalang.

ABS-CBN 2002 profit falls

ABS-CBN Broadcasting Corp., the largest radio and television network in the Philippines, said on Friday its 2002 net income plunged to P166 million.

The country's media giant, a unit of the Benpres Holdings Corp. conglomerate that is controlled by the Lopez family, posted a net income of P1.48 billion in 2001.

But ABS-CBN, which has an average audience share of 45 percent, said profits for the first quarter of 2003 were P107 million based on preliminary numbers, sharply higher than the P3.82 million during January to March 2002.

ABS-CBN said its net revenues for 2002 rose nearly 6 percent to P10.9 billion from P10.3 billion in 2001.

ABS-CBN shares closed 11.32 percent higher at P14.75 on Friday.

2-month OFW dollar remittances up 5.5%

DOLLAR remittances from the country's eight million overseas workers reached $1.141 billion in the first two months of the year, up 5.5 percent from $1.081 billion in the same period last year.

In January, the level was placed at $611 million. The February dollar remittance figure of $530 million was slightly down from $530.68 million in the same month last year. This was despite a 5.6 percent improvement in the number of newly hired and rehired OFWs to 70,098 from 66,380.

The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas said Filipinos working overseas might have held on to their dollars in February, when the peso was volatile, in anticipation of a continued depreciation of the peso.

A weaker peso means higher peso returns for the dollars sent or brought home by OFWs. The low level of OFW remittances in February added pressure on the local currency during the month up to March 12, when it hit an all-time low of 55.099 to $1. The peso, however, has since recovered to close at 52.40 to $1 yesterday from 52.53 Thursday.

BSP Deputy Governor Amando Tetangco Jr. said the central bank adjusted the January remittances level upward after an item "was reclassified as remittance from OFWs."

While the level of newly-hired and rehired OFWs shd in January, the increase in deployment in February pushed the two-month level to 165,907, up 0.4 percent from 165,198 last year, according to the Philippine Overseas Employment Administration.

In 2002, the level of freshly-hired and re-hired OFWs reached 891,908, up from 867,599 the previous year.

Last year, the country's eight million overseas workers sent home $6.933 billion, the highest level of OFW remittance in history. This, however, was lower than the government's target by $1 billion.

Last year's remittances were 15 percent higher than the $6.031 billion in 2001. This year, the central bank expects OFW remittances to increase by 20 percent from the 2002 level.

The dollar remittances from OFWs represent nearly 85 percent of the country's gross foreign exchange earnings. It normally accounts for the half-percentage-point difference between the gross domestic product and the gross national product.

Monetary authorities count on OFW remittances in boosting the supply of dollars in the spot market.

Gov't wooing another US automaker

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

WITH Ford Motor Co. Philippines Inc.'s sustained exports of sedans and sport-utility vehicles, the Board of Investments is now wooing another major American automaker to use the Philippines as an export base for completely built-up units in the region.

Among the United States' top automakers, only Ford has so far invested in an assembly plant in the Philippines.

General Motors Corp. and DaimlerChrysler Corp. have local distributorship agreements selling vehicles assembled overseas.

While the Department of Trade and Industry did not identify the prospective American assembler, it has been reported earlier that DaimlerChrysler was currently choosing between the Philippines, Malaysia and Indonesia as potential relocation sites for its struggling factory operations in China.

General Motors had already spurned the Philippines as an auto assembly site years ago when it placed its money on Thailand.

Trade and finance officials offered General Motors a number of tax and non-tax incentives, but the world's biggest automaker decided that Thailand's bigger market offered more opportunities than the Philippines' market.

Trade Secretary Manuel Roxas II expressed confidence that the success of Ford's export program in the Philippines would convince other auto companies to put up assembly plants in the Philippines and transform the country into a CBU exporter.

The BOI reported yesterday that Ford shipped some 3,667 completely built-up units of the Lynx C-sedan and Escape to Indonesia and Thailand in the first three months of the year.

Ford Philippines president Henry Co said first-quarter exports generated around $2.3 million in revenues for the Philippine government.

Ford, which started its export program under the Asean Industrial Cooperation agreement, is projecting exports of 14,000 units this year.

In exchange for its sedan and sport-utility exports, Ford will bring Ranger pickup trucks from its Thai factory to the Philippines.

Ford has urged the trade department to provide between $600 and $1,000 in subsidies for each vehicle sold to other countries to encourage more assemblers to invest in assembly plants in the country and sustain the export of automobiles in the long-term.

Guarantee facility for Iraq projects OKd

not reach that level.

The move of Phillexim was in line with the requests of business groups for the government to pinpoint business opportunities arising from the reconstruction of Iraq.

Already, construction firms like DMCI Holdings Inc. of the Consunji family and EEI Corp. of the Yuchengco group have stepped up their hiring and training of personnel in anticipation of the huge demand for construction workers in that country. EEI Corp., according to business leader Donald Dee, had hired 400 additional workers to meet the anticipated increase in the Middle East's labor requirements. Phillexim would require firms applying for a guarantee to have a contractors' accreditation from the Philippine Overseas Construction Board, good financial standing and performance.

Aside from jobs and construction contracts, the Philippines is also looking at opportunities to supply food and other commodities to the war-ravaged country. State-run Philippine International Trading Corp. is working on an oil-for-food swap scheme.

Destiny in talks with potential partners

By Abigail L. Ho

CABLE operator Destiny Cable Inc. said it was not about to be acquired by any entity in the near future, although it did admit that talks with potential partners were still ongoing.

The company was reacting to reports that said Destiny would be acquired by Lopez-owned SkyCable Central CATV Inc., which owns two-thirds of leading cable operator Beyond Cable Holdings Inc.

"There is no definitive agreement of any type at this time. However, we will continue to explore various possible business options with potential partners that will enhance our ability to deliver better service to our customers. Anything beyond this is purely speculative at this point," said Bida Manalac, vice president of Destiny's parent firm Solid Group Inc.

Late last year, Destiny and Beyond Cable signed a memorandum of understanding to conduct negotiations for a possible partnership.

In an earlier interview, Manalac said there was nothing concrete about the agreement. It only opened talks between the two cable operators to find out if consolidating their operations would be of help in making both of them more viable in the longer term.

He added that Destiny was willing to open talks with any potential partner and not just Beyond Cable.

In a separate interview, SkyCable vice president for programs acquisition Juno Henares-Chuidian said the whole industry was actually moving towards consolidation, but this did not necessarily mean that SkyCable would be acquiring Destiny any time soon.

She even declined to confirm talks with Destiny, although she said Beyond Cable was always in talks with "others" in the market.

WHO calls for int'l action to prevent childhood deaths

By Charles E. Huban

LIKE children who get report cards, the world has just been graded on the well-being of its younger inhabitants—the 1.8 billion people aged up to 14 years.

The grade could hardly be considered "passing" as millions of children, which make up 30 percent of the world's more than six billion people, are continuously suffering from long-term damage to their health every year from exploitation, abuse and violence.

According to the report issued by the World Health Organization, more than five million children die every year from diseases, infections and accidents related to their surrounding environments.

The WHO called for urgent and concerted international action, saying even simple efforts could help a lot in preventing childhood deaths caused primarily by acute respiratory infections, vector-borne diseases such as malaria and diarrhea, and accidents on roads and near homes.

Children's environment

A growing number of diseases in children are linked to the unsafe environments in which they live, play, learn and grow, according to the United Nations Children's Fund (Unicef).

In a statement issued last Monday, World Health Day, Unicef executive director Carol Bellamy said governments and communities have to address both the physical environment in which children spend their days, and the "protective" environment that is essential to keeping every child out of harm's way.

Unicef defined a protective environment as one in which

- Communities and families are committed to upholding of child rights.
- Laws are put in place to protect children and prosecute offenders.
- Laws are consistently enforced.
- Media highlights the issues and challenges discriminatory attitudes.
- Adults—parents, teachers, religious leaders and others—who spend time with children are able to recognize the signs of abuse and respond accordingly.

Top killers

The WHO also reported that children under 5, who comprise only 10 percent of the world's population, currently bear 40 percent of the global disease burden.

Air pollution from the inappropriate combustion of fossil fuels for cooking and heating causes respiratory infections, which are responsible for up to 20 percent or around two million deaths in children under 5 years of age.

The second biggest child killer is diarrhea, with around 1.3 million children each year dying from it. The disease is related to inadequate water and sanitation.

Malaria kills approximately one million children every year, mostly in sub-Saharan Africa.

On the other hand, traffic accidents and drowning are the leading causes of children's death from unintentional injury worldwide.

Inexpensive strategies

The WHO suggested several inexpensive strategies to combat these threats:

- Washing hands with soap or ash before preparing food, before meals and after defecating significantly reduces the risk of diarrhea, even when the overall quantity of water available is limited.

- Ensuring safe sanitary facilities and the use of separate latrines for boys and girls encourages latrine use and reduces disease transmission. Proper waste management and the relocation of waste dumps away from human settlements protects children from scavenging and exposure to hazards.

Safe water storage in the home and simple treatment when water quality is in doubt leads to proven health benefits.

- Good ventilation in homes, improved cooking stoves and clean household fuels decrease indoor air pollution and the incidence of acute respiratory infections.

Screening of doors, windows and eaves, together with the use of insecticide-treated mosquito nets, is a very effective protection against malaria.

- Advocating for safer roads, regulating traffic and lowering speed limits reduce the risk of injury and death which children face from road accidents.

Paranoid about SARS

By Rafael R. Castillo, MD

ON MY way back from a recent trip abroad, I noticed many travelers in the airport and even inside the plane wearing face masks, making them look like surgeons about to excise a cyst. The infamous SARS (Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome) has certainly taken the fun out of traveling to other countries, except perhaps to a pathologically adventurous few who find more fun and excitement traveling to SARS-infected countries and not taking any precautions at all.

On the other extreme are travelers whose fear of the SARS virus is so overwhelming they think the common cold or sore throat they have might already be SARS. In most instances, it's a false alarm.

There's so much fuss about SARS. Hopefully, the culprit bug will be identified soon and the effective antimicrobial known. At this point no one can say for sure what it really is. Is it a modern type of a deadly plague? Could it be a form of bioterrorism? Or is it simply a sporadic outbreak of an atypical type of respiratory infection—similar to the avian flu—which is expected every now and then?

Identifying the bug

They've somehow identified the family to which the SARS bug belongs, but it's a big family and determining which of them is responsible for SARS is still a long shot. But it looks like our scientists are catching up on the SARS virus and proper identification and treatment should be coming soon.

Until that happens though, SARS remains a worldwide health threat. And we better take it seriously.

"The world needs to work together to find its cause, cure the sick and stop its spread," says Dr. Gro Harlem Brundtland, WHO director general.

The symptoms of SARS include initial flu-like illness characterized by rapid onset of high fever followed by muscle aches, headache and sore throat, dry cough and shortness of breath. The infection rapidly progresses and is followed by bilateral pneumonia. Some cases deteriorate to acute respiratory distress which would require a mechanical respirator to assist the patient's breathing.

Nonspecific symptoms

The big dilemma is that the symptoms for SARS are nonspecific and are usually seen in ordinary types of respiratory infections.

It is understandable that one would panic when these symptoms are present. But unless one has had close contact with another person who has been diagnosed with SARS or has recently traveled to areas where SARS cases were reported, it is highly improbable that it is SARS.

In fact, even in high-risk patients—more than 60 so far had been admitted in local hospitals for possible SARS—none turned out to have the dreaded disease.

Dr. Camilo Roa Jr., a well respected pulmonologist at the University of the Philippines College of Medicine, allays the undue fear of the public regarding the actual risk of getting infected with the mystery disease.

"The public should not panic since the disease is rare in a community setting," says Dr. Roa. "Case fatality risk of those who went on to develop pneumonia is only 5 percent, which is much lower than the common community acquired pneumonia in the elderly."

According to the Department of Health, there is still no reported case of SARS in the Philippines, which can make one feel confidently safe about domestic travel. Several Filipinos suspected to be possible SARS victims have all been given a clean bill of health, definitely not the way SARS would behave in a patient.

Healthcare heroes

The DOH urged the public to stay calm because aside from healthcare workers and those who take care of the sick, the likelihood of an average Filipino getting the infection is rare, especially with the strict quarantine precautions they're enforcing.

Speaking of healthcare workers who are at high risk of getting the SARS virus, we have to commend them for their heroic act, attending to their SARS patients despite the overwhelming risk of infection. Top health officials in Hong Kong and Hanoi have already succumbed to the disease.

Precautions

Someone sent me an e-mail message from Dr. Justin Wu whose team has been managing SARS cases at the Prince of Wales Hospital in Hong Kong for the past few weeks. He offers some precautions in the event—may God forbid—that SARS gets to our country:

- Always wear a well-fitted mask in escalators, buses, trains, offices, restaurants and shopping malls. Don't go to cinemas. Push the button in the lift using your key to avoid any direct contact with your bare hand. If you can tolerate a latex glove, wear it.

- Don't touch your mask, it traps a lot of droplets.

- All surfaces within a distance of five feet from a patient are highly infectious because of droplets. Wash your hands frequently. Don't rub your eyes, touch your nose or mouth before washing hands.
- Clean the door handles, furniture and floor with diluted (1 in 100) bleaching detergent. Dettol is not useful. Wash your clothes immediately after going home.

- A patient is highly infectious 2-3 days even before developing illness. Consider high-risk individuals potentially infectious even if they look healthy.

It looks like the SARS scare is going to be around for a while. And when everyone thought that it would already be safe to travel, it just might strike back again.

Well, knowing how virulent and infectious the SARS virus is, it's understandable that even doctors like myself are starting to get paranoid about it. After looking at all the SARS files and pictures of patients, I almost wore a face mask and a pair of latex gloves while I typed this article.

The healing poison

FOR THE PAST 10 years, doctors have treated patients suffering from migraines, facial tics, back pain and the after effects of stroke the same way, and patients have responded well to the treatment. Now they're adding cerebral palsy to that eclectic yet highly desirable list.

The name of the wonder treatment?

Botox, better known the world over as the wrinkle-erasing, sweat-reducing, celebrity favorite.

Surprised? I admit I didn't expect to see migraines on the list because I'd read a few other theories as to what causes them. But the other conditions do make sense.

At any rate, Botox works the same way for all of them: by blocking the signals sent to the nerves by the muscles. Without these instructions, muscles are paralyzed and stay relaxed for a prolonged period instead of contracting and causing pain and pain lines for all involved.

Key to treatment

Relaxed muscles are key to treating cerebral palsy, which is an umbrella term for conditions characterized by the inability to control one's muscles as evidenced by jerky or spastic movements. It's the result of the brain's inability to coordinate messages sent to the muscles with the desired resulting action, although the cause of the brain's malfunctioning, be it from premature birth, a lack of oxygen, etc., remains a mystery. Just over two out of every 1,000 people in the world are diagnosed as having cerebral palsy, and there is no cure for it.

For several years now, researchers worldwide have been treating small groups of patients with Botox. All papers published about these studies have shown that children who receive these injections demonstrate a marked improvement in their ability to control their muscles within three months from the start of treatment. Yet the studies didn't receive very much attention, perhaps partly because there weren't enough patients involved.

Massie Santos Ballon

And then Dr. Marc DiFazio of the Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., presented the results of his study at the American Academy of Neurology's conference in Hawaii (ever notice how all these major conferences are held in great travel destinations?) during the first week of April.

Study on children

Unlike previous studies, Dr. DiFazio and his colleagues looked at a total of 250 children aged between 1 and 16 years for two years. The patients were videotaped and their doctors and parents filled up evaluation forms to better follow the children's progress. Although all children were given Botox injections, only 206 of them kept coming back. In the end, 148 children with an average age of 2 years became the focal point of the study.

Dr. DiFazio was delighted to report in Hawaii that the prolonged Botox treatments had positively affected nearly 90 percent of the patients involved in the study. They could stand longer, were able to control their own movements for the first time, could feed themselves, and even hold a pen.

For some patients, the effects of the injections wore on longer than the expected four-month efficacy period. He also noted that five of the patients treated suffered side effects such as flu-like symptoms (not SARS though despite all the furor or we'd have heard of them by now) and weakened legs. In conclusion though, his study didn't prove anything other doctors had known for years: that Botox may not work for everyone with cerebral palsy, but it does make a fairly dramatic difference in the lives of those who respond to it.

Secret to Botox

The secret to Botox's efficacy is, of course, the botulinum toxin type A from which it is purified and diluted. What may not be common knowledge however is that there are seven types of botulinum toxin (types A-G), four types of which affect humans. Botulinum toxin types C, D and G affect animals. Despite studies showing that botulinum toxin types A, B, C, E and F have therapeutic benefits, I suspect the reason only type A is on the market at the moment is that the effects last much longer than the others do.

Considering all the good Botox seems to be doing for various segments of society, it still bears noting that the botulinum toxin from which it is derived is considered a chemical weapon.

A minute amount of the substance (one source says a gram which is equivalent to the weight of a paper clip, although last time I checked, a paper clip weighed much less) is strong enough to kill over a million people.

Iraq is supposed to have large quantities of the toxin stored away. One can only hope they will be found and disposed of safely during the ongoing war.

No to human clones!

EUREKA!

Queenie N. Lee-Chua

THE RECENT death of the first cloned sheep, Dolly, and the so-called claims about human cloning success, raise once more the viability of cloning—this time not only on the ethics of the issue, but also on the science of the technology as a whole. What is the science behind cloning? What is the stand of the Philippines on this issue?

The National Academy of Science and Technology, the highest advisory body in the land, held a roundtable discussion last month on the topic "Human Genome: Promises and Problems." Several experts spoke on different aspects. They include Dr. Eva Maria Cutiongco of the Institute of Human Genetics, National Institutes of Health, UP Manila; Dr. Ceila Torres-Villanueva of the National Institute of Molecular Biology and Biotechnology, UP Diliman; Dr. Cora de Ungria of the DNA Analysis Laboratory, Natural Sciences Research Institute; Dr. Edna Monzon of the Department of Bioethics, UST; and Dr. Mariluz Mojica-Henshaw of the Department of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology, UP Manila.

Let us focus on Dr. Mojica-Henshaw's report. The "production of genetically identical organisms," cloning (especially human cloning) can be either reproductive or therapeutic. They differ primarily on their goal—the former aims to create a newborn baby, and the latter pertains to stem cell research. Here the stem cells are removed from an embryo, cord blood, bone marrow and so forth to "produce healthy tissue or organs for transplant into sick people." Proponents of stem cell research argue that the health benefits of this technique (gene therapy, reduction of immune system rejection, etc.) are immeasurable.

3 methods

There are currently three ways to clone mammals: splitting off a cell from an embryo (twinning), the Roslin technique (used to clone Dolly) and the Honolulu technique (used to produce generations of mice). The specifics are too detailed to explain here (and interested readers can always refer to science Internet sites), but suffice it to say that the most efficient is the Honolulu technique. But this is not perfect. According to Dr. Mojica-Henshaw, "for every 100 blastocysts transferred, five to 18 fetuses form and two to three live mice are born." The Roslin technique is even less safe.

The NAST concurs: "Scientific data on the reproductive cloning of animals demonstrate that the procedure is far from perfect. Many clones die; only a small percentage of clones—about one to 5 percent for sheep and pigs—come to term. Abnormalities such as swollen placentas, enlarged hearts and defective kidneys have been observed in cloned mammalian fetuses.

"Coming up with implantable cloned embryos is also very difficult. Cloning Dolly the sheep was successful only after failures with 276 eggs. At the age of 5, Dolly was diagnosed to suffer from arthritis indicating premature aging, and at 6, she was recently put down due to a progressive lung disease."

Despite all the risks, why is animal cloning done? Well, it can help produce superior livestock (through breeding) and useful drugs (vaccines, for instance). It can also preserve endangered species.

What about human cloning? Here the issues are murkier, and here finally is the official stand of the NAST on human reproductive cloning.

"In 1997, the Vatican, through its Pontifical Academy for Life, called for a worldwide ban on human cloning, citing anthropological and theological principles—that human cloning opposes the dignity of human procreation and of the conjugal union and it could result in the perversion of fundamental relation-

Large potential seen for herbal medicines

By Tessa R. Salazar

A GERMAN scientist, who discovered a cure for his asthma almost 10 years ago in the Philippines using the herbal plant lagundi and found a cure for his kidney stones using sambong, said Philippine plants and herbs have huge health benefits and economic potential.

Dr. Rummel Dietmar also predicted that local herbal medicine production will increase more than 500 percent in the next five years.

"It may even be (as high as) 1,000 percent because (of the low production levels) right now," said Dietmar, a consultant of the Department of Trade and Industry's Center for International Trade Expositions and Missions (Citem).

He said the herbal industry's annual production in Germany is $3.5 billion, Thailand has $50 million and Malaysia has $900 million. In the Philippines, it is less than $10 million annually.

"Filipinos are not used to the idea of regularly using Philippine plants. They don't know the incredible potential of local medicinal plants," Dietmar said.

The Department of Health's Philippine Institute of Traditional and Alternative

Health Care (Pitahc) has herbal processing plants in Cagayan Valley, Tacloban, Davao and Cotabato. Among the plants they process are lagundi, sambong, tsang gubat, yerbabuena, ampalaya, garlic, guava leaves, ulasimang bato, and niyog-niyogan.

Pitahc offers training on traditional and alternative health care modalities like herbal medicine, massage therapy and acupuncture.

More sunshine

Dietmar has developed more than 40 products from Philippine plants, including memory enhancers, hypoglycemics, antitussive, female and male tonics and lifestyle products. He also developed herbal medicine for drug companies and conducted studies on an Abs herbal product endorsed by singer Gary Valenciano, a diabetic.

"When I came here 10 years ago, I had asthma. I came to know lagundi. Later I developed kidney stones and learned about sambong. These plants acted in a way I had never known in Germany," Dietmar said.

"Their effectiveness has an explanation. We have much more sunshine here; thus photosynthesis in the plant is much more intense than in Europe, where plants have only four to six months to mature. Here, there is sunshine even during the rainy season."

Dietmar lamented that herbal medicine is not being taught in Philippine medical schools. In Germany, special schools teach herbal medicine homeopathy.

Phytotherapy

The term "herbal medicine," however, is a misnomer. The technical term for herbal therapy is phytotherapy.

But strict quality standards on herbal products have to be met for phytotherapy to be acceptable.

"We talked about it with the Bureau of Food and Drug. It's a concern that is very hard to address. (For now), we have to trust manufacturers to conduct their quality controls very carefully," he said.

Some of the books Dietmar has authored are "Use and Prescription of Philippine Medicinal Plants for Primary Health Care: An Introduction to Phytochemistry"; "Selected Useful Plants of the Philippines. An Introduction to Economic Botany-Pharmacognosy-Phytopharmacology" and "Cosmetic Uses of Philippine Medicinal Herbs Economic Success with Philippine Plants and Crops."

Tooth decay in young children linked to secondhand cigarette smoke

CHICAGO—When it comes to childhood caries, it could be secondhand smoke and not the sugar monster that is landing young children in the dentist's chair, a study released recently said.

US researchers investigating the reason for relatively high rates of tooth decay among children in low-income families found a significant association between cavities in primary, or "baby teeth," and exposure to environmental tobacco smoke.

Baby teeth are normally pushed out by permanent teeth, which have a harder enamel surface, at around the age of 5 or 6 years.

In a study of 3,500 children between the ages of 4 and 12, one-third had at least one filling, while a quarter had at least one unfilled decayed tooth surface.

Slightly more than half (53 percent) had high blood levels of cotinine, a by-product of nicotine—a marker that correlated strongly with the children who had tooth decay.

The findings "provide one more piece of evidence indicating that passive smoking is harmful and that all children should be allowed to grow up in a smoke-free environment," the authors wrote in the study that appeared in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The University of Rochester researchers, who based their analysis on a national study conducted in 1988-1994, did not find the same link between passive smoking and decay in permanent teeth.

They speculated that secondhand smoke might promote tooth decay in children's first set of teeth by reducing their immunity and/or contributing to dry mouth which interferes with the beneficial properties of saliva.

Tooth decay among young children has declined dramatically in many developed countries thanks to fluoridated water and toothpastes. But many young children living in poverty are still susceptible to the oral infectious disease, according to the study.

ASK THE DENTIST

Paul R. De Castro, DMD

Signs of oral cancer

HOW can I check myself for oral cancer? What are its signs?

Ruel I

You can do your own mouth check followed by a visual exam by your dentist. Typical signs of oral cancer include a wound that never heals and a lump in the mouth, tongue or throat. There is also a white or red patch that doesn't go away.

Other signs are difficulty in chewing, swallowing and moving your tongue and jaw.

Always consult your dentist when something doesn't feel right. Your chances of recovery are better if the disease is treated early.

ships of humanity."

The NAST continues, "Considering the scientific evidence which shows the serious risks that procedures of human reproductive cloning may bring about to the donor of eggs, the surrogate mother, and to the resulting fetus and newborn, and considering the ethical, psychological, sociological and theological concerns, we lead the science community in supporting the ban on research on cloning human beings and reaffirm the DOST stand of 1997 on nonsupport for any research on human reproductive cloning."

As for therapeutic cloning, this is also controversial. Hopefully the NAST will come up with a policy statement about this in the near future.

AN INCURABLE VIRUS IS IN MOTION. How strong is your Immune System?

By: Dr. Rafael Sabando

AN INCURABLE VIRUS IS IN MOTION. ANYONE CAN BE AFFLICTED. That is a fact. Since there is nothing else yet to treat this, we are to rely largely on our immune system.

Our immune system is like an army that fights-off disease-causing microorganism. It works 24 hours a day, engulfing and digesting not only foreign particles but also damaged and aged cells. For as long as we live, the immune system does not stop. Sadly, however, it gets weak. With the modern way of living - unhealthy diet, insufficient sleep, and unbearable work stress - our immune system gets deteriorated gradually. And this is something that we cannot allow to go on; otherwise this will result in all sorts of diseases, ranging from the simple scratch of razor to the innumerable infections that appear to be around these days.

The truth is, the hazards alone brought about by our present environment are far more than enough to ruin our immune system. On this concern, pollution is taking the lead. The toxic substances caused by the smog may trigger the onset of respiratory problems and heart disease. Dampened waste materials, on the other hand, may contaminate our food and water, thereby propelling diarrhea, amoebiasis, hepatitis and headache.

Surely, you can practice as much discipline as you like to perform your daily exercise and to follow that strict nutrition regimen. But how can you avoid talking to a chain smoker who happens to be your employer or your brother? The point is there are agents around you that, in one way or another, make you ill.

The incurable virus that threatens our life at the moment is only one of the seemingly infinite infectious diseases. Every day our immune system battles against sore throat, sinusitis, colds, pimples, eye irritations, UTI, cough, bronchitis, angina and many more.

The immune system, once it collapses, will actually invite all varieties of ailments. Therefore, the care for our immune system is a necessity. One way to do so is to take proper food supplements to compensate the nutrients that we often miss.

With proper food supplements, you can help back up the small armies within you. You can help them survive in their daily but hardly visible foes. Remember that the victory of your immune system is your victory too.

BEE PROPOLIS - NATURE'S MOST POWERFUL ANTIBIOTIC

Bee Propolis is a major breakthrough in the quest for an all-natural food supplement that helps battle the ravages of virus.

Carlson Wade in his book, Propolis: Nature's Energizer, wrote, "To understand how propolis can be a natural antibiotic, note the following: if a rodent enters the hive and is stung to death, it remains in the hive since bees cannot move the foreign intruder. To prevent decay, the bees encase the rodent in propolis, then wrap beeswax around the entire mass. Thus embalmed, the rodent body remains intact without decay or decomposition for at least 5 years. The same principle is studied by scientists as a means of immobilizing infectious bacteria and viruses. In the human organism, the propolis-wrapped virus can be destroyed and eliminated. Unlike man-made antibiotics, propolis is always effective because bacteria and viruses cannot build tolerance against it."

Propolis is a very important preventive supplement that works safely and naturally to strengthen our immune system. It has no toxic side effects, no contraindications and no upper limits of ingestion.

Danish naturalist and medical writer Dr. K. Lund Aagaard, M.D., wrote in his paper entitled Propolis, Natural Substance, the Way to Health, "The field of influence of propolis is extremely broad. It includes cancer, infection of the urinary tract, swelling of the throat, gout, open wounds, sinus congestion, colds, influenza, bronchitis, gastritis, diseases of the ears, periodontal disease, intestinal infections, ulcers, eczema eruptions, pneumonia, arthritis, lung disease, bile infections, circulation deficiencies, warts, conjunctivitis and hoarseness.

"Propolis may be used by everyone, sick or healthy, as a means of protection against microorganisms. Propolis is also efficient against conditions caused by bacteria, viruses or different fungi."

Propolis power may well be attributed to its rich concentration of bioflavonoids. Bioflavonoids generally are plant pigments, they provide a wide variety of important nutritional benefits.

What To Look For In Bee Propolis?

1. Flavonoid content. Flavonoid is the most important ingredient in propolis. The higher its content, the more effective the propolis is. High-Desert has gone to great lengths to obtain raw propolis with consistently high flavonoid content.
2. State-of-the-art Processing method. Most of the propolis extracts in the market have been processed under high temperature and inferior processing methods. More than 60% of the active ingredients may have experienced severe deterioration. In High-Desert, extraction of raw propolis is carried out in low temperature and a proprietary process which is able to effectively remove all foreign matter and impurities while at the same time preserving the bioactivity of the propolis, its flavonoids and other important nutrients.

Honda's 2003 Civic gets even more exciting

HONDA Cars Phils. Inc. announces the release of the 2003 Civic, now with even more eye-catching sporty styling and class-leading innovative features. The new Civic comes with a newly designed front bumper and grille; a matching chrome moulding; and multi-reflector Euro-style tail lights that adds to its distinguished styling that is uniquely Honda. What's more, all variants now come with the exclusive "wave key", a difficult-to-copy key for that added safety and security.

The '03 Civic is available in 1.5 LXI MT or AT, 1.6 VTI MT or AT and 1.6 VTI-S MT or AT. New and exciting colors for the '03 Civic are Red Rock Pearl, Silverstone Metallic and Aqua Green, in addition to the popular Dark Emerald Green, Taffeta White and Zircon Blue. Exclusive colors include Circuit Blue for the 1.6 VTI and Night Hawk Black for the VTI-S.

In the heart of the '03 Civic VTI/VTI-S is the revolutionary Honda VTEC Technology. Balanced power and superior performance with excellent fuel efficiency is made possible with the Civic's 3-stage VTEC (VTEC3) engine. Capable of producing 130ps of power at 6,600rpm and a more stable torque output at 2000 - 5000rpm, the Civic's powerplant offers a spirited driving response while achieving minimum levels of fuel consumption.

Safety measures remain advanced in the '03 Civic. Honda's G-CON (G-force Control) impact-absorption technology, which effectively reduces potential injuries not only to the driver and passengers, but to pedestrians as well, is unbedded in all variants. Seatbelts with pretensioners are standard features in the VTI/VTI-S variants of the '03 Civic. Supplemental features include a dual SRS Airbags and ABS with electronic brakeforce distribution in the VTI-S variants.

On top of all the 'class-above' features of the Civic, is the value it holds for owners. Maintenance costs are effectively reduced to half with its extended warranty of up to three years of 100,000 kilometers. Oil and lubrication change has been extended to 10,000 kilometers.

Launched early in 2001, the award-winning 7th generation Civic broke ground in the Philippine market with its revolutionary flat rear flooring, expanding cabin space. This followed global Honda's concept of "maximum, machine minimum." The concept is based on maximizing interior space and comfort for the driver and passengers while maintaining a compact exterior.

The Civic heritage spans for almost three decades and continues to be a best-selling car that epitomizes Honda's innovative design. In the Philippines alone, 79,248 units have been sold since its introduction in 1992. This is a testament to Honda's commitment and dedication in providing only the best quality products to Filipinos.

MAYBANKALINGA: TOWARDS A BETTER WORLD

Maybank Philippines' first donation drive, MaybankKalinga, coined from Maybank and Kalinga was officially launched last December 2002. MaybankKalinga continues the tradition of the Maybank group's involvement in bringing cheer to less fortunate children and participating in social welfare projects; and along the parent bank's activities in Malaysia. Maybank Philippines' officers and staff who participated in the drive gathered used clothes, toys, books, groceries, toiletries and even cash. These donations were then sorted and formally handed over to Caritas Manila, the chosen beneficiary of the drive. The simple turnover ceremony, recently held at the Caritas Manila, was attended by representatives of Caritas Manila, their scholars and parents, along with Maybank Philippines president and CEO Lim Hong Tat, HRD head Doogie Justino, the project coordinator; and members of the MaybankKalinga organizing committee. Ms. Tessie Gomez, special programs manager of Caritas, accorded the response to Maybank, in behalf of Caritas Manila.

G7 chiefs to discuss rebuilding Iraq economy

WASHINGTON—Group of Seven powers will discuss rebuilding Iraq's postwar economy and dealing with its massive debt this weekend, US Treasury Secretary John Snow said Thursday.

Snow said he expected "substantive discussions" with the G7 finance ministers and central bankers, and with the 124-nation International Monetary Fund and World Bank, about how to help the Iraqi recovery.

"It is important to recognize there that it is not simply recovering from 25 days of conflict but rather the task ahead is recovering from 25 years of economic misrule and mismanagement," Snow told a news conference.

Snow is to dine Friday and meet formally Saturday morning with his colleagues from the G7 nations—Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan. Russia will join part of the talks.

He then joins meetings of the IMF and World Bank over the rest of the weekend.

US President George W. Bush had emphasized that international institutions would have a vital role to play in the reconstruction of Iraq after the war, Snow said.

He urged the World Bank, the IMF and other institutions to offer their expertise and technical assistance as soon as possible.

World Bank president James Wolfensohn told a news conference earlier that he would ask his board of governors for approval before seeking an appraisal of Iraq's needs.

Snow said he was puzzled by that position.

"I hope he re-thinks that because I think the World Bank today should be getting involved," he said.

The US treasury secretary said the World Bank was an expert in assessing reconstruction needs.

Experts said the Iraqi debt could amount to more than $100 billion. Combined with claims from the Gulf War and debts on contracts, the number might swell to more than $300 billion. AFP

US economy showing no real signs of revival

WASHINGTON—The limping economy is showing no meaningful signs of revival, the latest batch of reports suggests.

Shoppers were tightfisted in March, based on disappointing sales figures reported by the nation's largest retailers. New claims for unemployment benefits fell last week, but are still at a high level, pointing to a sluggish job market.

And, the US trade deficit, while narrowing in February, was still the third highest on record.

"Overall, the economy has ended the first quarter on a weak note," said Lynn Reaser, chief economist at Banc of America Capital Management. "Businesses and consumers remain cautious."

Chief executive officers of major US companies, meanwhile, are largely glum about the economy's prospects in the months ahead, the Business Roundtable, a big business advocacy group said Thursday.

"CEOs identified their greatest economic challenges as consumer uncertainty resulting from the implications of war with Iraq and terrorism, and weak consumer demand," said John Dillon, chairman of the Business Roundtable and chairman and CEO of International Paper.

Even with signs that the war in Iraq may be winding down, Dillon said executives are still concerned about how long it will take for the economy to get back to full throttle. To help along the economic recovery, he urged Congress to enact President George W. Bush's tax-cut plan in its entirety.

With shoppers fixated on war news and worried about keeping their jobs during these muddled economic times, the nation's retailers reported Thursday that they suffered another month of disappointing sales in March. Unseasonably cold weather also hurt merchants by damping demand for spring clothes.

Separately, the Labor Department said that new claims for unemployment benefits fell last week by a seasonally adjusted 38,000 to 405,000.

On Wall Street, the Dow Jones industrial average gained 23.39 points to close at 8,221.33.

In a third report, the Commerce Department said the trade deficit narrowed in February to $40.3 billion as prewar jitters cramped Americans' demand for foreign-made goods. Exports edged up.

However, even with the slight improvement in the trade deficit picture, February's trade gap marked the third biggest monthly deficit on record. AP

Nikkei dives to 20-yr low

SINGAPORE—Japanese stocks were hammered to a 20-year low on Friday but the dollar remained steady as investors, convinced that the war in Iraq had ceased to be a market factor, looked to US economic data and other pointers.

European markets were seen likely to open modestly higher, but analysts stressed that the fall in the Nikkei only reinforced the frailties of the world economy.

Foreigners and pension funds sold off Japanese blue-chips, pushing the Nikkei down over two percent to 7,807.99 points just before the close. That was the lowest the benchmark has been since 7,824.82 two decades ago.

Other Asian stock markets were mixed, oil edged higher in choppy trade and gold prices slipped.

The United States announced its trade balance and weekly jobless claims on Thursday and markets interpreted both numbers as positive, sending bond prices down but not really supporting the dollar.

The currency inched higher on Friday but dealers said it remained susceptible to bad news as attention focused on the University of Michigan consumer sentiment survey, due out later in the day, and a weekend Group of Seven meeting.

"The market is not ready to bet on a quick US recovery," said Yasunari Ueno, chief market economist at Mizuho Securities. "It will wait for US economic indicators and corporate earnings reports." The market moves during the day amply demonstrated that investors had firmly turned away from the war in Iraq, convinced that the conflict had run its course. But in its absence, skittishness prevailed.

"We have got a situation that investors are still very cautious as we turned our focus towards global economic conditions. This is not a market for heroes," said Michael Kendall, head of private client research at JB Were in Sydney.

"The balance of risks is still on the downside." The dollar stood at 119.71/74 yen, slightly higher than 119.59 yen in late New York trade.

"Under the current sentiment, the market is looking for reasons to sell the dollar, so it tends to pay more attention to bad data and bad news," said a dealer at a major Japanese bank.

On the Tokyo stock market, Toyota Motor Corp dropped 3.5 percent to a seven-year low as the Nikkei finally closed down 2.05 percent at 7,816.49. Reuters

NHA presents in-city relocation sites

THE National Housing Authority (NHA) yesterday presented various in-city relocation sites as housing options for Caloocan City relocatees.

NHA general manager Edgardo D. Pamintuan said the agency has negotiated with Caloocan City land owners who have offered their properties as resettlement sites for some 597 informal settlers who are set to be displaced by the rehabilitation and modernization of the Philippine National Railways (PNR).

"Caloocan urban poor families have refused the government's off-site relocation program fearing that they will lose their only source of income, and be forced to move away from their livelihood and other needs," Pamintuan said.

Instead, he said, these families have requested that they be resettled within the city. "Recognizing their request, NHA has identified other housing options for the city residents' preference and consideration," Pamintuan said.

Among the options available are Tala Medium Rise Housing Project (180 housing units generated), Miramonte Park in Brgy. 180 (200 lots generated), Philippine Veterans Bank Property in Camarin (300 lots generated) and Futuristic Property in Bagumbong.

Asia frets as threats to growth mount

SINGAPORE—The spread of SARS, the uncertainty of Iraq and the risk from North Korea all point to slowing growth in Asia this year, the latest Reuters Asian economic poll of over 100 economists showed yesterday.

Forecasts have been trimmed for most of Asia since a similar Reuters poll in January. The most notable revisions were in Singapore, Malaysia, Hong Kong and South Korea, where average forecasts were cut by at least 10 percent and as much as 30 percent.

"If things were not bad enough with the ongoing Iraq war and geopolitical risks from North Korea, we now have the SARS virus to contend with," said Sailesh Jha, a senior regional economist at the Development Bank of Singapore.

"All these event risks are causing a doom-and-gloom scenario for the economic outlook for the region, to the extent that recession fears are emerging again in the Asian crisis."

China's growth is expected to stay strong and Thailand remains a bright spot in Asia. Forecasts for the Philippines and Indonesia have improved slightly as they weather domestic economic troubles better than many had expected.

But the rapid growth of 1999 and 2000, as a resurgent Asia bounced back from the 1997/98 financial crisis by riding the final stages of the global technology boom, is a fading memory.

Despite the current difficulties, economists throughout the region remain confident that things will improve next year.

Huge foreign exchange reserves, current account surpluses and fiscal and monetary policy flexibility also mean Asia is in a stronger position to cope with this downturn compared to 1997.

Every country polled in the Asia-Pacific region is expected to post stronger growth next year—apart from New Zealand, where economists see growth moderating to 2.6 percent from 2.9 percent.

With growth worries, inflation is not a regional concern—although countries such as South Korea will be keeping an eye on signs of rising prices—and if oil prices ease as the Iraq war draws to an end, price pressure will remain a non-issue.

Trade surpluses are generally expected to remain healthy in those countries that are running them, although they will probably be dented as global demand slows.

China's trade surplus is forecast to drop by over 25 percent to $22 billion in 2003. This would leave them less money to buy US dollar assets, buying which has helped limit Asian currencies' gains against the dollar in recent years.

The Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome virus is the great unknown for Asia's economies.

ERC clears P0.0025/kwh hike for Napocor's watershed reservations

By Ronnel W. Domingo

THE ENERGY Regulatory Commission has approved yet another added charge of 0.25 centavo (P0.0025) per kilowatt-hour collected from all customers of the National Power Corp. for the management of watershed reservations.

In a 20-page decision dated April 2, the ERC said Napocor could draw up to P70 million from a special trust fund handled by the Power Sector Assets and Liabilities Management Corp. (PSALM).

The quasi-judicial body also ordered the National Transmission Corp. and distribution utilities to collect from end-consumers the added charge and remit this to PSALM.

Napocor originally asked for some P120 million for its watershed program, which would maintain the power firm's capability to support the generation of electricity from water-based power plants.

The firm's watershed reservations are currently plagued with, among others:

- Abusive land use practices such as shifting cultivation, upland farming and illegal forest product harvesting,

- Proliferation of squatters, illegal fish cages, resorts, quarrying activities and forest fires; and

- Uncontrolled conversion of land use and increasing population in the uplands.

'Don't just do something; sit there!'

By Marge C. Enriquez

THERE comes a time in many people's lives when a sledgehammer forces them to halt and examine the values they abide by.

Whether through a misfortune, disease, emptiness or a loss of meaning, there rises a need to make a full personal reassessment.

Being intangible, values are not easy to take hold of and look at. In fact, the word "values" itself is not usually found in people's vocabularies. Yet, values invigorate our thoughts, shape our emotions and influence our actions. Thus the famous biblical quote, "Without vision, people perish."

You might add that without values, people will steal or kill. Or gossip, criticize and flaunt egos. Just read the papers or watch the news on television, and you'll find enough proof that if it's values we're looking at, the world is impoverished.

Values spell out what people naturally care about most. On one end of the spectrum, material objects determine our disposition in this consumerist world. This lower value set leads to amassing, greed and, eventually, conflict.

On the other end of the spectrum are virtues, or the natural qualities of the spirit—peace, love, purity, benevolence, respect, tolerance, cooperation, honesty, and so on.

Personal and collective crises are the result of neglecting the values within ourselves and our relationships as human beings. Only when the suffering becomes so intense do we stop to ask what went wrong and what needs to be done. By then, change could be very difficult to accomplish.

More from Mike

The past months have been marked by mass protests worldwide, on account of the Iraq war. Last Wednesday, it was the Iraqis' turn to vent their anger by dismantling Saddam's statues. These demonstrations have made us question the erosion of values and the need to heal hemorrhaging cultures.

London-based life coach Mike George once commented on the futility of rallying on the streets. He said: "In most 'developed' cultures today, the immediate reaction is, 'My God, don't just sit there, do something!' But that's like adding gasoline to fire."

He pointed out that for centuries, the response of spiritual cultures has been the opposite: "Don't just do something, sit there!" Insightful reflection, contingency planning and positive thinking can prevent the fires of conflict from spreading. The change happens by making a personal journey not by marching on the streets.

For many readers who enjoyed George's essay on "Vision," published last January, here's another inspirational piece, this time on the real meaning of courage.

Elan endeavors to report on the rich, of whom there are a few left, and the famous. The old rich spend their money wisely by contributing to the making of a better society. For example, the philanthropists who were recently bestowed the Liturgical Awards from the Order of Malta, made personal sacrifices to uplift the lives of the poor and needy. Best of all, they have eschewed publicity.

Some fashion sense

I sometimes wonder if the younger generation of Manila's elite could ever follow in the footsteps of their parents or grandparents who built churches, orphanages, contributed generously to the flourishing of the arts, and undertook projects aimed at comforting the sick and the needy.

It seems that the younger and middle-aged set from upper middle families dominate the society pages these days. But mostly they are photographed partying. Or if they do something charitable, a photographer is always in tow, for eventual information dispatches to media.

Teddy Montelibano's series on Bacolod's new elite recounts how these Negrenses, many of them bred in the United States, downshifted from life in the cosmopolitan fast lane to the simplicity of their hometown.

In our fashion pages (see Section D), Elan waxes nostalgic with the vintage clothes of Azabache which were fashion-forward 20 years ago, and look nothing less than classic today. Harriet Ann Dy profiles a garment manufacturer, tackling fashion the way it should be written—as an economic indicator. There is a clear distinction between hacks and journalists in fashion reportage. The former are glorified hawkers whose idea of "doing the readers good" stems from indoctrination by their sources in the arts of illusion and profit. At the expense of the public, naturally. Readers who have made Vogue and its ilk more sacred than any holy scripture think these hawkers are "angels."

The journalists' role should be more than just to inform or to entertain. They should be able to put things in a context that is relevant to the reader's lives.

PIA LOPEZ nee Montinola saw how her adopted hometown changed: "I tell my kids they can't depend on the land in Bacolod and work on the sugar farms here because these are getting smaller and smaller, subdivided through generations. I tell them, 'Make your own life outside of the province; go to Manila and find jobs.'"

This is the same advice Ria de Villa Montelibano, is preparing to give Ramoncito, her 12-year-old boy, when he goes to college. "I will encourage Cito to go to Manila to develop connections and live a life out there. He can always come back here if he wants to, but that would be his choice after he's seen the world."

Ria had a full life before she met, fell in love with and married Ramon Montelibano. She had a career as merchandise manager, and also designer of ladies' accessories in the ladies' division of Rustan's. She got the job after graduating magna cum laude from the Fashion Institute of Design and Merchandising in the US and lived abroad for a while.

She had a doting father and a close-knit family of brothers and sisters who would travel abroad together—as often as twice a year to Rome at the time that her mother, Henrietta de Villa, was envoy to the Holy See, the first Filipina to be appointed to that diplomatic post.

Ria was swept off her feet by Ramon, a dyed-in-the-wool Negrense (his dad is from the province and his mom, the former Miriam Ongsako, is Manilaña). They were married in 1990 and immediately came to Bacolod after their honeymoon to settle in a house that could be regarded as grand even by Manila standards. "I love my husband," Ria says. "I was happy with him, happy living in this gorgeous house. My in-laws and all of Ramon's relatives were very nice. We had an army of help, but I had no friends, my family was far away, and I had nothing to do!"

She recalls the "crazy" things she did to occupy herself during the week. For instance, if she had 30 items in her grocery list, she'd buy five on Monday, another five on Tuesday, and so on, until she'd gone through the entire list. Also, she would fly to Manila a lot during the first two years. "I was half in Bacolod and half in Manila," Ria says. She joined civic clubs like Zonta, just to meet people.

Ramon did not want her to find work that would take her out of the Montelibano compound. Finally, in 1992, two things happened that would make her more grounded in Bacolod: Dona and the Manila Connection.

Dona is the label of formal wear and wedding ensembles that she and her team of skilled sewers crafted inside the family compound for a small, exclusive clientele comprised of friends, family and a few referrals. At about the same time, she was invited to lunch by Pia Lopez and other members of the Manila Connection.

"We sat there trading stories, and it was like group therapy," she recounts. "I was not alone pala! All those years, everybody in the Connection was like me, fish out of water. So, okay, I started to come alive!"

House on the prairie

Initially, there were Pia Lopez, Clarissa Araneta and Gia Reyes Locsin, the wife of Federico Locsin, golfmate of Pia's husband and pioneer in Ernest Escaler's Gourmet Farms. Like Ria, Gia had once done merchandising work for Rustan's, that is, in the Philippines department. She was also among the first local entrepreneurs to engage in the imported health food trading business. Both activities Gia had to give up when she married her husband.

"I had absolutely no idea what a farm looked like," says Gia. When her husband told her he intended to work in his family's farm in Negros, she imagined it would be something like a "Little House on the Prairie," with a farmhouse and barn, plus chicken, cows and other animals grazing in the field.

When her husband first brought her to the family farm in Cadiz, she looked at this lone structure in the midst of sugarcane fields, and "tears ran down my face!" Just like most of the wives in the Connection, Gia's longing for Manila in the first years of her married life saw her flying back and staying as long as six weeks in a row sometimes.

Eventually, she said, she realized that coming to Bacolod had really been "a blessing because it is a better place to raise a family." She and her husband are with a Christian community of businessmen and professionals in the province. Now Gia says, "I am very happy here, I have found a home here."

Terrific place

The sentiment is shared by other members of the Manila Connection, like Pacita "Bubut" Guevara Acuña who is married to Ding Acuña, brother of Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho's wife, Klm, Melissa Santiago-Soliven and Corina Kalaw-Monfort.

All her life, Soliven had been a denizen of Manila's corporate world, and she continued to be so even after she got married and came to Bacolod. Her husband took over the family farms and started other businesses which included, for a time, a ceramics factory. Likewise, Soliven's husband put up and headed Active Land, marketing arm of the property development company Active Group.

At present, she spends her time between Bacolod and the United States, where she takes care of the elderly members of her family. "If I had children," she says, "I would like them to grow up here because it's safe. Everything is convenient and, for as long as your needs are simple and you don't yearn for nightlife, this place is terrific. What you see is what you get."

Bacolod even attracts such super-active people as Corina Kalaw and her husband Ricky Monfort, Corina, daughter of the late banker Edgardo "Hadji" Kalaw and the former Corito Araneta—both of whose roots are Negrense—was working in a stock brokerage firm in San Francisco. She met and married Ricky—who had already been living there for over a decade. When their baby girl was born, both decided they wanted a change of scenery, and came home. To Negros.

Corina now works for the local branch of the country's biggest sugar trading company, All Asia Countertrade Inc., while Ricky takes care of his family's commercial real estate property and a bar, the popular Cyberasia. She misses the conveniences of life in San Francisco and her family and friends. She misses shopping and the wide variety of restaurants in Manila. But, she quickly stresses, "I have very good friends and I've met a lot of nice people here; Negrenses are creative and even if this is the province, the Negrenses have a lot of flair and are, in a sense, cosmopolitan."

No pressures

Pacita "Bubut" Guevara Acuña, meanwhile, was a model and theater artist in Manila. In 1974, she joined the Binubuning Pilipinas pageant and represented the country in the Maja International Contest in Spain, where she placed third runner-up. Today, she is busy running the finishing school she put up for winners of beauty contests in the different towns in Negros Occidental province.

She met Ding in New York in 1975. They were married shortly after, and when he was done with school in the US, they came home and he went on to study law at the University of the Philippines. In 1981 the couple flew to Bacolod, where Ding began managing some of the family's properties.

"I had some difficulty learning the dialect," Bubut recounts. Also, I am from Laguna and my voice was big, like one of the characters in the movie, 'My Big Fat Greek Wedding.' When I spoke, all the maids thought I was angry!"

She has since learned to tone down her voice when she speaks Ilonggo. During her friendless years in Bacolod, she remembers, her main concern was, "If I die now, will anyone come to my burial?"

Now her thinking is, whatever Bacolod lacks—shopping, for instance—is more than compensated for by the fact that she has grown really fond of the place. "I like Manila. But I love Bacolod. My children and family are with me here. This is a very serene place. There are no pressures for me. When people ask where I am from, I look at them and say, 'After 25 years in this place, am I not from here? Don't you consider me one of your own?'"

What matters most

Everyone in the Manila Connection agrees that quality of life is practically guaranteed in Negros Occidental. Philip and Clarissa Araneta, for instance, marvel at the fact that they can bring their two elder children to school in the mornings and still have lunch all together at home—which is impossible to do in Manila.

Since 1992, the Aranetas have leased their farm in Cadiz to the tenants, leaving them free to pursue other activities. Philip swears by a certain health supplement which, he says, reduced his high cholesterol and chronic high-blood pressure to normal levels. He is now a big distributor of the product. Clarissa helps him and between this and other business endeavors, they are able to take good care of their growing family. In short, they seem to have found the secret to a good and happy life.

While the limitations to Bacolod life are obvious, the city offers a real lifestyle alternative for people who have "been there and done that." The air is unpolluted, the pace relaxed, the surroundings serene. One can really taste the food he eats and smell the roses, so to speak. Are these not, after all, what really matters?

Dancing dining in Cebu

BUSINESS and pleasure consisted the agenda of our recent week-long Cebu visit.

The Dancesport Council of the Philippines held its quarterly ranking and competition at the Waterfront Hotel in Lahug. The event was a joint venture of the hotel, the City of Cebu, the office of Mayor Tomas Osmeña, and the DCP Cebu Chapter, led by hard-working couple Edward and Eleanor Hayco.

To everyone's surprise, the Grand Ballroom was filled to the rafters. Because of the event's success, Cebu Vice-Mayor Mike Rama and Waterfront president Patrick Gregorio promised they would support all future dancesport events, that would be held in the Queen City of the South.

We were feted by Cebu's social celebs, Amparito and Michel Lhuillier, with dinner at their sprawling residence in the heart of the city. Cocktails and grilled seafood specialties were served at the poolside. Enjoying the alfresco meal with us were Gregorio and his wife, Marichelle, Gerry Richards, and BMW's boss Alex Thorwirth.

Frenchman Garrison Rousseau, who has made Cebu home, also hosted dinner at his lovely Mactan retreat. Guests included Margie Lhuillier, diplomat Bebs Garcia with Texan wife Lisa, Mi Vida owner Natalia Dia, Maybelline Teh and the Lhuilliers.

Cebuano businessman Maz Borromeo hosted lunch at the famous La Tegola Italian Restaurant, owned by an Italian ophthalmologist turned restaurateur.

Most of our nights were spent at Mi Vida, Cebu's current party zone, certainly the place to be seen and to people-watch. We spotted society columnist Maurice Arcache, Dondi Joseph, Zee magazine publisher Eva Gullas and its editor Jing Ramos, architect James Hao, Gil Carungay, New York-based chef Stephen Aznar, Mactan Shangri-la's Spa director Mike Monsod, culinary artist Debbie Enriquez, and Natalia's sweetheart, the handsome Spaniard Augusto Jimenez Diaz, who was visiting at the time.

Discover Gold in a Bottle

Much of the history of the precious metal known as gold is mired in remote antiquity. The lack of hard archaeological evidence makes it impossible to pinpoint the time and place of man's first encounter with the noble metal. One of the earliest recorded mentions of gold, however, came from ancient Egypt circa 3000 BC, where pharaohs and temple priests used the shining yellow metal as adornment. Though at the time gold had yet to become the medium of exchange, the ancient Egyptians, who were always deemed to be ahead of their time, knew early on that gold's resplendent luster and scarcity made it perfect material for exquisite jewelry. As such, to this day, anything associated with gold is equated with value.

This connection to gold is not lost in the fine art of brandy making. Since 1902, Fundador, produced and bottled by the renowned House of Domecq, has been the standard upon which all other brandies are measured — a product precious in itself. The stringent and painstaking development of Fundador is backed not only by years of experience, but also by a dynamic aging process known as the Solera System, which ensures its consistent quality. Fundador Solera is distilled from the finest Spanish grapes, aged in oak sherry casks, and stored in the bodegas of the Domecq family in Jerez, Spain. With such an established and meticulous process backing it up, it is a small wonder that Fundador has become the number one imported spirit in the Philippines.

How, then, does an established market leader improve on an already exceptional product? The answer is simple: Allied Domecq's foray into further product development has led to the new Fundador Gold Reserve — a Solera Reserva brandy which is aged longer than its successful sibling. Through further aging and careful blending with brandies from the personal reserves of Don Beltran Domecq himself, the House of Domecq has come up with a rich, warm aromatic brandy that is truly a pleasure to savor. Fundador Gold Reserve's amber and gold color, balanced and clean scent and smooth, lingering flavor invite the senses and invoke a sense of privilege — making it truly worthy of its distinctive name.

Just like the precious metal, which is often set aside for special occasions, Fundador Gold Reserve is best consumed in times of celebration. With its distinctive characteristics, it is a brandy made a cut above the rest — meant to be consumed by people who have learned to rise above. Its smoother taste and more aromatic scent serves as a reminder of just how special a product it is, and just how special the people who drink it are. Like the pharaohs and high priests of ancient Egypt, they who adorned themselves with gold, Fundador Gold Reserve fits the successful modern man and his lifestyle. The Fundador Gold Reserve experience is one invariably associated with celebrations, special occasions and special people — a crowning glory for personal achievement.

Discovering this kind of golden experience is therefore a joy in itself. With the arrival of Fundador Gold Reserve, they who feel like they've learned to make strides and earn personal victories have indeed found the perfect match. After all, discovering Fundador Gold Reserve is akin to hitting it big — a truly valuable experience to be cherished like the precious metal it has been named after.

For them, life is an expression of caring and sharing, and so their ability to appreciate it never flags. These humanitarians have been recognized by the Church for their role in reaching out to communities with the end in view of providing the poor and the oppressed a chance to rediscover hope.

The Philippine Association of the Sovereign Military Hospitaller Order of St. John of Jerusalem, of Rhodes and of Malta recently held the Liturgical Investiture Rites Award of Honors at the Archbishop's Palace.

The Order of St. John of Jerusalem was founded in the 11th century by St. Gerard to fight poverty. The Philippine Association was established by Don Paulino Miranda Sampedro, a Spanish Knight, in 1948. Members of this lay religious order, given the titles Knights and Dames, have dedicated their lives to promoting values and performing charity. By Mike George SOMETIMES life ahead can look and feel like a mountain. It stands before you as a barrier and a frightening if not awesome prospect, triggering feelings of foreboding and smallness as it drains the enthusiasm from your very veins.

And then along comes one of those mountaineer types, one of those people who thrive on the challenge of climbing a lofty peak, conquering flat rock vertical faces, slaying ice and snow along the way. Watching people like these take on life with gusto, even contempt, can sometimes give you hope. At other times they merely confirm your sense of inadequacy.

But mountains don't have to be climbed just because they stand ahead. The courage of the mountaineer is often mistaken for the ego of "I'm going to conquer you, like it or not."

The energy of that ego is the driving force that takes the climber to the top. Another word for this is ambition, and climbers—of the social type—seldom worry about who they have to clamber over along the way. Everyone knows a good climber, and seldom is he or she the most popular person in the world.

For most people, it takes the courage of honesty to say, "It looks too big for me. I just don't know how to get there." But it is this very honesty that releases the tension of having to confront the monster of the moment, which in turn allows you to see there is another way. All mountains don't have to be climbed the hard way, especially not the one called life.

Extend the courage of honesty into the courage of letting go. Let go of the fear that says, "What if I don't make it?" Let go of the baggage of possessions, which you cannot take with you. Let go of other people's opinions which you had best not bother with.

Wellspring within

It takes courage to let go of self-imposed limitations and visualize yourself looking down on the mountains of life, seeing them as a small range of hills. This vision alone releases energy for forward movement. And finally, it takes courage to let go of the belief that there is such a thing as fear!

Where is all this courage going to come from? How are you going to access it? Courage is not a packaged or bottled market commodity. To be filled with the energy of courage is to be inspired. There are never doubts in inspiration. There are no fears in spirited effort. The wellspring of courage is within.

The tales of courage in history books always recall the physical overcoming the physical, the defeat of the enemy. But is this real courage? Or is it an offspring of folly, a defense against the threat of death, obedience to authority for fear of punishment, or, as with the mountaineer, the ego's driving need for achievement and recognition?

few people ever talk about the courage required to admit they are wrong, the courage to go into the meeting with that person you dislike the most, and make yourself like him. Or the courage to see the good side of a person, when all you want to see is the bad; the courage to love, when all you want to do is hate. The courage to climb your own internal mountains of jealousy, anger, self-doubt, and all those feelings that say you are not good enough.

This is the courage that creates real heroes, invisible and unsung—heroes taking on their mountains and quietly inspiring others to reach for their own peaks.

IT WASN'T your traditional cookie-cutter wedding. But then, the couple was not your traditional bride and groom.

Phillip Hagedorn, eldest son of the late great stockbroker Fred Hagedorn and Pamen Sanchez, had enjoyed the life of a bachelor and man-about-town; while Techie German, daughter of PR wizard Rell and Josephine German, had grown wary of marriage and was in no hurry to walk down the aisle.

But after they met on a blind date in 2001, they were inseparable. The decision to marry came not from romantic notions of happy-ever-aftering. Rather, it came as Phillip and Techie realized there was no person they would rather laugh and cry with, perhaps bicker with, and yes, grow old with, than the other. Thus on that warm Saturday, against a backdrop of the sea and the setting sun, Phillip and Techie exchanged vows that they themselves wrote.

The location was quite dramatic: a grassy lawn beside one of the cliffs at Tali Beach, in Nasugbu, Batangas. The bride's ecru, off-shoulder gown by Lynn Lagdameo had flowing chiffon sleeves and a short train that billowed wistfully in the wind; while the groom's stylized linen barong and black wide-legged pants were in keeping with the relaxed beach setting.

Fr. Mike Duffin officiated the rites. Witnesses for the groom were brother Christopher Hagedorn, childhood friends Patzi Elizalde, Jon Rocha, Ames Legarda, and US-based Miguel Picornel.

For the bride, witnesses were elder sister Mayet Tiaoqui, friends and colleagues Karen Tiong, Jeanette Marabut, Odette Pumaren, and Cinty Curran, who flew in from Hong Kong. A garland of flowers was used for the symbolic "tying of the knot," with the groom's sailing buddy Andy Soriano and the bride's UK-based sister Chynot Thomson doing the honors.

It was an intimate affair, with only family and friends. Phillip's family also included Jaime and Cristina Davila, Stephanie Hagedorn, Patzi and Pamen Elizalde, Cari and Patricia Ottiger, Joe and Ane Hagedorn, Tito and Colo Picornel, Santi and Marilen Elizalde, Carlos and Melissa Elizalde and Vicky Soriano. Others on the bride's side were brothers-in-law Alisdair Thomson and Sandy Tiaoqui, and younger brothers Lito and Alan with their wives, Ditas and Doris.

A reception followed at the sprawling garden of the Hagedorn Tali beach house where some 200 guests gathered, among them Tali neighbor Jojo Silverio, Carlos and Cay Araneta, Juanjo Berenguer and Judith Zapanta, Noli Legarda, Brian Head, Fern and Junie Peña, and Becca Dosch.

Also among the wellwishers: Don Anton Roxas, Ricky Recto, Ifaki and Anna Ugarte, Juan Jose and Miren Berenguer, Miguel and Claudia Tambunting, Rosanna Fores, Jaime Legarda, Daniel Brias, Steve Maniquis, Santi Freixas, Che and Asun Soler, Martin and Grace Valencia, Albert and Monica Ahura, Paolo Prieto and Clara Sevilla.

Aside from a buffet spread by Via Mare, guests were treated to drinks, dancing and fireworks. Cookie Chua's band provided entertainment well into night. In lieu of the traditional garter and bouquet throwing, the newlyweds made unmarried friends go through a compatibility quiz game with their significant others. Alfred Torres and Mia Veroy, Alex Tiu and Karen Tiong, Javi Berenguer and Lexi Schulze, Santi Picornel and Kimmy Johnson were asked comical questions, especially about crucial dates and their partner's hobbies and "secrets." Couples who have been married a long time were honored and asked to dance.

The short program allowed guests like Frankie Araneta, Vicky Esguerra, Sofia Elizalde, Joey Hagedorn, Andy Soriano and Carlos Araneta to toast the couple. But Phillip's three "best men" Patzi Elizalde, Jon Rocha and Ames Legarda dispensed with the customary speeches and, in a touching gesture, presented a video montage instead. And so, with pictures showing Phillip's and their own growing up years, they highlighted an enduring friendship. There were shots of the four men, first as children playing together, then as teenagers on family trips to Majorca, Spain and, later, as adults on "male bonding" jaunts to Pamplona. The slide show ended with Phillip finding his "new" best friend, Techie.

It was a night when everyone present seemed heady as much with drink as with merriment, and the air teemed with wishes of love and happiness for the new Mr. and Mrs. Hagedorn.

How to impress consistently

By Meluchi A. Rivera

LONGEVITY is becoming rare in the restaurant business these days as faddish, fickle palates pursue ever-changing dining fare. The term "dining establishment" is fast becoming an oxymoron; food places are "out" before they have time to establish themselves.

Zen belongs to the select few that have been called and chosen. When it opened in Glorietta 3 (tel. no. 892-6851) in 1994—it is still in the same spot—the owners hoped to woo a younger, hipper crowd of Japanese food lovers. Zen quickly found a niche by positioning itself between the typical Japanese restaurant of that time, which either catered to the very high end, or were of the fast-food/take-out/all-you-can-eat variety.

Now on its ninth year, Zen keeps people coming back by tweaking the menu here and there, while maintaining its best sellers. It recently launched its delivery service; perfect not only for lunch but also for board meetings and small functions. An added come-on for the busy executive is that items are brought in authentic Japanese lacquerware, instead of depressing styro boxes and plastic spoons.

During our visit, four appetites took on four variations of the bento-boxed meals, and were more than sated. Each bento box is value-packed: one gets an appetizer (either sushi or salad), two entrées, miso soup, rice and dessert (fruit or jelly) for under P300. We noted happily that portions were adequate and, in parts, quite generous; there were no "throw-away" dishes and ingredients did not differ from those used in regular menu items.

The gindara and tempura bento, Zen's best-seller despite being the priciest at P450, is well worth it for the melt-in-your-mouth grilled cod and three large, crisp pieces of prawn tempura. Other mentionables include the steak-grilled rolls of tofu wrapped in strips of marinated beef, an interesting contrast in textures. Zen has also come up with the chicken teriyaki and sakoro (tenderloin) steak combo, perfectly seared, which made my carnivore-friend happy.

On the other end of the spectrum is a new vegetarian menu. We had the moyu, baby cucumbers with fermented soybean; steamed asparagus; and the horens tofu, blanched spinach topped with fried tofu, seasoned with sesame oil and the teriyaki tofu. We came away amazed at the wealth of flavors now available to the health-conscious set.

Zen has also unveiled a range of dishes for the hot summer days. Try the somen surprise, cold white noodles topped with ebi, kani, tamago and cucumber; or the summer udon salad. The hearty servings may initially intimidate, but be assured that the flavors are light and leave the diner feeling cool, not weighed down at all. The uni tempura is also a revelation, with the nori and sasho leaves enhancing the fishy taste of the sea urchin. Try them with flavored tofu shake.

New restaurants can always surprise and impress; Zen has managed to surprise and impress consistently, and over time—a real feat.

THE BENTO as best seller. Ha! Melt-in-your-mouth goodness that's good for your budget, too.

One true thing

By Marge C. Enriquez

"TRUE fashion-insider's fashion-is about state of mind," says author Colin MacDowell. Fashion mindsets could be neither here nor there, making them unfathomable to those outside the circle of mavens.

But one woman, to this day, continues to be admired for a certain sort of craziness that she claimed for her own.

Spanish designer-turned-restauranteur Helena Carratala Guerrero was arguably the Philippines' most original character. To those who knew her, she was ahead of her time. The woman who invented the trendy label Azabache (which means "black" in Catalan) was the perfect fashion icon for her singular and elegant style. She was daring without being camp, and there was nothing predictable about her or her collection.

Helena was married to businessman Xavier "Wahoo" Guerrero. Although she never had any formal background in fashion, the imaginative Helena would design clothes for her two daughters. People were so impressed with the children's clothes, that friends eventually advised her to make clothes for adults.

Shocking black

Restauranteur and fashion plate Mary Ann Cuenca-Tinio met Helena in 1973, when the latter started custom-made clothes. Tinio recalls that Helena had a refreshing and spirited approach to color and pattern, and yet her early silhouettes were easy to wear and flatteringly feminine. (Tinio kept many of the Azabache clothes that you see on this spread. Elan presents a "boul collection," literally by setting the clothes against artsy canvases designed by former mother-in-law Elena Rocas.)

In 1976, Helena launched her ready-to-wear label, Azabache. With her husband as financier and official photographer, she opened a small boutique on Pasay Road, Makati then eventually moved to ShoeMart. Tinio recounts that the store was "shocked" at the all-black collection, the Sya being Chinoy and superstitious about the color. Yet, women were snapping up the clothes.

Helena pulled it off—transforming the cheapest fabrics into spunky garments that had Manila's social set running to the store every week. When was the last time a local label brought fun to shopping and wearing clothes?

Azabache introduced high-heeled and neon-colored sneakers in the 1970s. It's only in the past few years that both athletic brands and designers' houses started developing the fashion sneaker. Before "Flashdance" popularized leggings, Azabache had patterned leg wear.

"You were always a standout wearing an Azabache," says Tinio. "I once wore striped leggings, and someone approached me and asked if I had just come out of prison."

Perfect model

Elektrika (a.k.a. Josephine Go) was the perfect signature model for Helena, who favored exotic types. Azabache's first collection featured the heretofore lowly muslin, dyed in such vivid colors as maroon, aqua, fuchsia, red and orange. At one time, Elektrika crocheted shawls and dyed them in these same colors. Fashion icon Chona Kasten bought several pieces.

Helena's clothes had Armani's tailoring, Versace's ebullient colors, and Kenzo's layered, patterned, cottons that swung to life. But the woman's own artistry shone through, says Elektrika.

Way before Shanghai Tang, Azabache introduced Mandarin-collar shirts and Chinese slippers in neon colors. Then came silk separates with vivid embroideries and drawings by Helena's artist-brother, Ernesto. The gingham collection infused with animal embroidery was another sellout.

In the '70s, when attention was being called to the low neckline of '50s fashion, Azabache exposed the shoulders instead. It revived bustiers and introduced tube dresses with mesh in the back.

Another phase was dedicated to layers of transparent tulle. This "ballerina look" finally caught on only in the past two years. For a touch of nationalism, Azabache introduced its own version of the butterfly-sleeved kimono paired with bloomers!

Elektrika recalls that for the finale of a fashion show at the now-defunct Plaza restaurant, she floated down the runway with nothing but a multi-layered tulle skirt. Going topless was unheard of until then. When she was pregnant with her first daughter, who is now MTV VJ Sarah Meier, Elektrika was still modeling Azabache's maillots.

Another trademark

The Indian collection is another of Azabache's trademark styles. It consisted of Nehru suits, sari designs, jodhpurs and dhotis, kurtas and pajamas.

"Helena never copied," recalls Elektrika. "If ever she borrowed an idea, she made it better and more functional than the original."

Helena expressed herself through the clothes and makeup she wore. After her visits to India, she frequently wore tunics and slim pants in Indian white or black—which nearly nobody wears in that subcontinent. Although she was blonde and had alabaster skin, she adapted the look of the Indian women. She sported a nose ring 20 years before the dawn of the body-piercing fad. She lined her eyes with kajal, an herbal eyeliner. For contrast, she wore white foundation.

Helena's entrances to parties were always dramatic. In one theme party, she dressed up as a maya shrouded by a lace mantilla that cascaded from the giant comb. She arrived once wearing a hoop gown, with two holes from which young daughters peeped out.

Helena's personal style was unconventional, yet it exuded an authoritative air. Says Elektrika, "She never looked like a fool. In fact, she made a statement: 'I'm a fashionista; I don't have to try hard.'" People would gasp in awe at her bravado. One simply never heard backstabs or nasty comments about Helena's style.

Helena was said to be ambitious to the point of bringing her fashion collection to New York. Whether that show did her career in or not, is still a big question today. Azabache folded up in the early '80s, just after Helena and her husband split up. Helena proceeded to run a successful restaurant in New York, but eventually sold it.

The fashion scene that Helena played as an instrument to make her own kind of music is all but forgotten. But for those who understand quality and individuality, her aura lingers.

Seeing a future in homegrown labels

By Harriet Ann Dy

IN an era when "permanent discounts" is fast becoming a retail trend, it seems that fashion executive Sheree Roxas-Chua Gotuaco picked just the right time to, well, go Solo.

"I wanted to penetrate the lower-end market," Gotuaco says, and also because she was bent on establishing a foothold on malls in provincial capitals where, understandably, "lower price points are more attractive." No surprise though, that when Solo opened its doors last Christmas, it also embraced shoppers in Abnago Square in Baguio and Robinson's Place in Sta. Rosa, Laguna.

In the United States, a tough economy and a new shopper profile used to discounts are just two factors that have further slowed down the retail business. "If it's not marked down," writes New York Times reporter Thane Rozhon, "America's shoppers are telling merchandise to forget it."

Locally, the ubiquity of such cheap chic chains as Anonymous and Human have successfully married "steal" and style. Solo's concept brief promises to "carry only items below P500" while still guaranteeing "standout" apparel and gift items.

No greenhorn in the fashion business, Solo is actually the fourth retail label of the family-owned Elite Garments International. Other local house brands include Twenty-Two B.C., Ensembles and Freeway.

Introducing mix and match

Quite appropriately, Solo also marks Gotuaco's 10th year in the business, rising from assistant vice-president to her current role as chief operating officer. From overseeing operations of both local and export business, she is now tasked with ensuring the 50-year-old company's growth in the next five years.

A magna cum laude marketing and management graduate from the University of Southern California, Gotuaco went on to earn a Professional Degree in Fashion Design from the Fashion Institute of Design and Merchandising in Los Angeles.

She started Ensembles a few months after she came back home because she felt there wasn't much choice for career wear in terms of combining separates at that time. Crenseless clothing was born, and Gotuaco came up with appropriate marketing and merchandising strategies and, until three years ago, designed collections for the label.

In 1995 she went for the young urbanite with the creation of Freeway. By far the most profitable among the house brands, the teen-oriented label has also consistently made the top 20 percent in local ladies' apparel, according to several mall managers. The company recently put a face to the brand by signing up actress Giselle Tóngi (she dropped the "e" and adapted the Swiss spelling) as exclusive image model.

Tóngi has recently graced the billboards. Asked the effectivity of billboard advertising, Gotuaco replies, "Store traffic has risen from 50 to 100 percent in our outlets, depending on which outlet."

And how influential is an image model?

In terms of sales, it is hard to gauge since G.Tóngi will still be launched as the image model in May. "I will have a better idea by third quarter of this year," she says.

Irony

"We have one designer for every label," Gotuaco says. "Design planning is done twice a month for Twenty Two B.C. and once a week for Ensembles and Freeway. All designers work with their own merchandising teams."

Needless to say, Gotuaco oversees overall design direction for the brands. "Because of its trendy nature, Freeway has the most leeway design-wise," she says.

Aside from steering local labels towards the right direction, Gotuaco is also keeping a steady eye on what her parents have developed as a garment exporter.

"My export and local departments function almost independently of one another in terms of marketing and merchandising," she says. "But there is also a synergy in terms of shared costs in some aspects like delivery, accounting, production and HR."

She describes the export side as more mathematical and systematic, as opposed to the local aspect, where creativity is "a must." At present, exports account for 55 percent of the total business.

But a big irony is that an export-oriented company like Elite now also needs to import clothing to meet local demands for cost-effective garments.

"Unfortunately, the Philippines is not very competitive in terms of garment manufacturing costs," she observes. "Some of our garments are designed in Manila, sampled in Hong Kong, and produced in China." Almost all of Twenty Two B.C.'s inventory and around half of Ensembles' are manufactured locally, though.

Gotuaco offers: "You may ask, if we export, why do we still outsource for our local market? Interestingly, Hong Kong or China can accept smaller orders and have access to better fabrics. If we produce for our buyers, we would need to make at least 3,000 pieces per design to meet the minimum quantity required by fabric mills in Korea and other Asian countries."

Sadly, outsourcing is not a new phenomenon among local apparel retailers.

Like her North American counterparts, this Filipino has become a really smart shopper in search of the best deals around. "Good price and good quality," Gotuaco intones. More options, too.

The good news is, despite a tough economy, all three Elite labels broke record sales and registered positive sales growth last year, says Gotuaco. The bad news is, on the export end, the country's quota benefit expires in 2005.

Unless local exporters become more competitive, the local industry will lose a lot of business to China.

"(This is why) I am growing local labels," Gotuaco stresses. "I am focused on creating a good image and merchandise mix while being cost efficient. On the export end, I would like to maintain our good reputation."

Final question. Is she a Twenty Two B.C., Ensembles (classic dressing) or Freeway (young and trendy) customer?

Confession: "I would be a mix between Ensembles and Freeway." (Email the author at chinachua@hotmail.com)

Giselle Tóngi's spunk makes her the best spokesperson for Freeway.

IF Michelle Pfeiffer, 46, and Meg Ryan, 41, look younger these days, it's because they've just undergone the Blue Peel treatment.

The chemical peel is an alternative to the facelift. When one reaches age 30, the skin cells start slowing down in their task of producing elastin and collagen, the two substances that keep the skin supple. Wrinkles and large pores thus start appearing. Effects of previous sun exposures and current hormonal conditions become manifest, and the skin deteriorates. After age 40, crow's feet deepen, eyelids and eyebags become heavier, the skin sags over the lower jaw to form jowls. Brown spots and blotches threaten to never go away.

To prevent further skin degeneration at this point, Beverly Hills-based dermatologist Zein Obagi (pronounced obajee), recommends a deep chemical peel that can lighten the skin and improve the skin texture.

Gutting a chemical peel is not unlike visiting the aesthetician for a facial. Obagi says the results depend on the thickness, color and consistency of the patient's skin, the various agents used, and the dermatologist's skill.

He says most creams and moisturizers work only on the skin's surface and do not alter the skin's function. The Blue Peel, which he developed, penetrates the deeper layers of the skin to stimulate the cells that produce elastin and collagen. The formulation of the peel depends on the characteristics of the patient's skin. "It can be dark, light, oily, combination, or dry, fragile or tough," Obagi says.

Precise procedure

In an interview with the magazine, The Art of Cosmetic Beauty, Obagi explains that treatments to facilitate elastin growth need to hit a specific level of the skin—the immediate reticular dermis (IRD). Otherwise, the peel will have a superficial and short-term effect. If it goes too deep, on the other hand, it could cause permanent scarring.

The Blue Peel consists of 15 percent trichloroacetic acid, the exfoliating agent, combined with a base compound to help the skin absorb it to the accurate depth. The blue color was included to help the dermatologist know the exact amount of cream applied and to guarantee if it was applied correctly.

The Blue Peel pause

This new chemical treatment developed by Zein Obagi can take years off your face in only 30 minutes

"We fixed it at a low concentration, measuring exactly how much solution was needed. Then the physician can use a coat system," Obagi says. "A first coat of between four and five millimeters is applied, followed by a second coat of the same thickness. Most skin types require three coats in order to reach the IRD. If only two coats are applied, there will be no change."

The patient is required to fast for six hours, and undergoes sedation while the 30-minute procedure is performed. Afterwards, he or she is advised to stay home from a week to 10 days—or risk being mistaken for a bomb victim from Basta.

During the healing time, the skin sports a bluish tint. The peel, together with thin surface layers of damaged or aged skin, is washed away with frequent reapplication of a compress, corticosteroid cream for the inflammation, and an Obagi moisturizer.

While the actual peel is being performed, then will also be a stinging or burning sensation which is tolerable," Obagi says. "But there should not be any more pain during the healing phase. The skin peels by shedding the nerve endings."

After the downtime, the patient can resume regular activities, and need not fear sun exposure—provided there's protection. By then, layers of dead skin cells have been exfoliated and replaced with healthier ones, allowing the new skin's clarity and elasticity to resurface.

Aside from diminishing wrinkles, pigmentation, sun damage, acne scars and large pores, the Blue Peel also firms up sagging facial muscles. The doctor says a patient may fully benefit from one procedure. "If the improvement is not as much as hoped for, it can be done two or three times more until the skin reaches its optimum state and then once every two years to maintain it," he says.

To get accurate results from this procedure, Obagi advises that patients should consult an experienced physician to assess their skin type. In the Philippines, the Belo Medical Clinic exclusively offers the Blue Peel.

"The physician needs to have a sound knowledge of the individual skin and patient management and a basic knowledge of the skin in general," Obagi says.

COMPANY presidents and CEOs have the authority to hire and fire, but who would want to enlist them as models unless they look like Colin Farrell or Giselle Bündchen?

This was the concept of Philippine Fashion Week's "The Power Generation" forecast, held at the Hotel InterContinental. The show was sponsored by Sony Ericsson and directed by Joey Espinoza of Runway Productions. Petite Anna Periquet, president of Aurelio Periquet Jr. Foundation, twisted the arms of her friends, mostly scions and head honchos, to strut down the ramp suited in Hugo Boss and Liz Claiborne. They didn't have any jitters, as seen in these photos taken backstage.

Believe it or not, the perfect endorsers for fashion are real people rather than young and nubile models. Customers realize that the clothes they see are meant for people with not-so-perfect proportions. Real people as models has been the trend in the United States for over a decade, and the Philippines is finally catching up.

Staying ahead of the pack

DESPITE our Third World going on Fourth status, the Philippines is one of the biggest markets for mobile phones. For years this market has been dominated by a Finnish brand, Sony Ericsson beat the competition by being the first to launch the much-talked about P800 model which includes a personal digital assistant (PDA), an audio-video player and camera with which you could add sound clips and create postcards. Right now it's the only model that can identify the owner's handwriting. During Fashion Week Patrick E.S. Larraga, Sony Ericsson's marketing manager, showed how the P800 could provide nonstop entertainment and business right in the palm of one's hand.

Colin Farrell rings up US box-office honors

By Dean Goodman

LOS ANGELES—Irish actor Colin Farrell, one of the hottest new stars in Hollywood, dialed his third consecutive No. 1 movie at the North American box office last Sunday as the thriller "Phone Booth" finally reached theaters almost five months behind schedule.

Publicist

"Phone Booth" rang up $15 million in ticket sales in its first three days, according to studio estimates. Farrell plays a New York publicist who picks up a ringing telephone in a phone booth only to learn that he is in the sights of a sniper.

The movie, which cost a modest $13 million, was pulled from its original Nov. 15 berth because real-life snipers were terrorizing the Washington D.C. area at the time.

"Considering the journey this picture has taken, I'm just totally delighted with this result," said Bruce Snyder, president of distribution at the film's producer, Twentieth Century Fox.

Outspoken

Farrell topped the box office twice in February with "The Recruit" and "Daredevil," thereby giving "Phone Booth" some visibility that it may not have had five months ago. Also in that time, the outspoken 26-year-old Dublin native has become a staple of the gossip pages.

The film also marks a comeback for director Joel Schumacher, whose career hit a slow patch after his disappointing "Batman & Robin" movie killed off the lucrative franchise in 1997.

Fox is a unit of News Corp.'s Fox Entertainment Group Inc.

Distractions

Overall box-office sales slipped for the fourth consecutive weekend on a year-on-year basis, according to data from tracking firm Exhibitor Relations Co. The top 12 movies grossed $84 million, down 10 percent from last year and down three percentage points from last weekend. Industry observers continued to blame distractions of the Iraq war.

Last weekend's champion, the urban White House comedy "Head of State" fell to No. 4 with $8.8 million. The $35 million production was released by privately held DreamWorks SKG.

Historic climb

Recently I had the rare opportunity to interview Peter Hillary by phone at the local offices of the Star TV network. One of my first questions was whether he planned to conquer Mt. Everest a

Emotional

For his second climb, Hillary said that he felt very emotional when he reached the summit, particularly because he was there

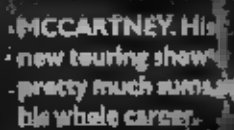

The expedition almost turned tragic. Hillary shared that the group nearly lost two cameramen when there was a major collapse in

This is another thing that Hillary, who is in great demand as a motivational speaker, finds important in life: "I think all of us should try to contribute something to others, other than just our families—you know, to the community. These days, that is not necessarily the community or city in which you live, or even the country in which you live. It can be in another country, and it's certainly what my family has done."

Himalayan Trust

The younger Hillary is now very active in this organization, which has built and run 42 schools, hospitals and medical clinics. "Obviously, we have to look after our families, develop our own careers, make a good living and have our own challenges, our own sports and leisure activities—but giving to others is an important part of that balance," he shares.

LONDON—Beatles fans recently received a double treat with announcements of a new world tour by Paul McCartney and the release

The hour-long DVD was shot at Harrison's studios at his mansion in Henley-on-Thames, Oxfordshire. The songs are mainly staples from their early performing days, including "Blue Moon Of Kentucky," "Ain't She Sweet" and "Thinking Of Linkin'."

A spokesman for McCartney told the British Broadcasting Corp. that the jam session was "really sweet. It's five old songs that they would have played in the days before the Beatles. It's really nice footage." AL

Target demographic

"A Man Apart," which Diesel finished in early 2001 long before vaulting to international stardom last summer with "XXX," revolves around the drugs trade in Los Angeles and Tijuana. It performed according to expectations, and a spokesman at New Line Cinema. Both Warner Bros. and New Line are units of AOL Time Warner Inc.

The two other movies that opened last weekend did not show much staying power, each losing about half of their audience. "The Core," in which the heroes must journey to the center of the earth to save the planet, fell three places to No. 6 with $6.3 million and a 10-day total of $20.9 million. The $60 million film was released by Viacom Inc.'s Paramount Pictures.

Military thriller

The John Travolta military thriller "Basic" followed at No. 7, also down three places, with $5.4 million for the weekend and $2 million for the 10 days. Sony Corp's Columbia Pictures paid producer Intermedia Films $1 million for distribution rights in North America and Japan. Intermedia is a unit of Germany's International Media AG.

New releases next weekend include "Angel Management," a comedy teaming Adam Sandler and Jack Nicholson; and "House of 1,000 Corpses," a violent horror movie directed more than two years ago by rock star Rob Zombie. Rout-

Nick Nolte comes clean about staying clean

By Jill Sorjeant

LOS ANGELES—Nick Nolte decided years ago that, when it came to the press, "the best approach to talking about my personal life was to lie." But there was no hiding when he got himself arrested "dazed and drooling" last September after an erratic drive down the Malibu coast and had his disheveled, wild-haired mug shot plastered on newspapers around the world.

Candid introspection

There is something refreshing about Nolte's world-weariness these days, his candid introspection, his struggle to cope with "real life," his impatience with playing the Hollywood game.

"I've always said I had substance abuse problems. It is something you deal with and you take care of it and you keep it under control."

"Every once in a while, you lose it. You saw my pictures. There's no hiding there," the gravel-voiced actor said wryly.

No-contest plea

Nolte checked himself immediately into a rehab facility after his arrest, which ended with a no-contest plea to driving under the influence of drugs, three years probation and an order to attend drunk-driving classes.

Nolte spent 28 days in an East Coast clinic, where "you get very humble, you learn to wash your underwear."

"Now the trick is not to relapse. And that's a matter of being vigilant. It's like having a disease. If you had a cancer on your skin and they burned it off, you'd wash it and clean it everyday," the two-time Oscar nominee said in an interview.

Six months on, Nolte looks a changed man. The mane hair from the famous police photo is cut short, the Hawaiian shirt replaced by a dark shirt and a stylish black leather coat.

He sips hungrily from a coffee mug, asks permission to smoke and reflects that an actor "has really no choice but to play himself." His character, Bob, in his latest movie "The Good Thief," comes closer than most.

Nolte plays a lovable loser with a romantic streak who drinks, gambles and shoots up heroin in the seedy twilight zone of the Nice underworld before taking on one last casino heist that might redeem his battered fortunes.

Inconsiderate oaf

As a former hellraiser himself who was once told by Katharine Hepburn that he was an "inconsiderate oaf who's been drunk in every gutter in town," it wasn't much of a stretch.

"I've lived that life. Apart from the heroin. So there's a bit of Bob, a bit of me. We're both getting older and have a bit of trouble functioning," Nolte said.

Nolte's 25-year career has spanned box-office hits like "The Deep" and comedies such as "Down and Out in Beverly Hills" to the romantic "Prince of Tides" and "Lorenzo's Oil."

But in the last 10 years he has shied away from Hollywood blockbusters for smaller, independent movies that better suit his own preoccupations.

"I'm, er, 62... I think I've lied so many years. I always bumped it up. When I was 40, I said I was 50. But now that I'm 60, I don't want to try to bump it up to 70," he laughed.

"So I'm attracted to films that deal with what my psyche is going through... not the big studio films that have a target audience of 14 or 12. I can't get that." Nolte says acting gives him more pleasure now than it did when he found fame in the 1976 TV mini-series "Rich Man, Poor Man" and went on to become one of Hollywood's best-known leading men.

Tall stories

He also became a notorious spinner of tall stories: That he was 15 when he learned to read, that his first (of three) wives was a trapeze artist in a circus and that he lived for a while in a Mexican whorehouse.

Real life, like fame, is something he has a problem with.

"I'm not a fan of real life. Real life has got some strange rules to it that are very odd... I'm shy, so socialization is a difficult thing. I'm not comfortable with a lot of people I don't know. I'm not good on the weather," he said.

"When you have a success it elevates you to another plane and then they put a lot of money on the table, saying 'do the same thing again.' And I thought, I can't do that."

Nolte shares an affinity for gambling and poker with his "Good Thief" character Bob, who does eventually enjoy a stroke of luck that leads to personal redemption. Reuters

These stars redefined sex appeal on film

Nestor U. Torre

THESE days on the local film front, starlets become sexy stars practically overnight. Unfortunately, if all they have going for them is sexual daring or gumption, after they've bared it all in their first starring vehicle, they never get to topbill another film.

Flourishing careers

Compare that to the flourishing careers of past sexy stars in the United States and Europe, and you get a clear idea of the lack of long-range vision on the part of many local sex-flick producers.

They discover "new" beauties who turn out to have a shady past, and all-too-brief present, and a nonexistent future—unlike the famous likes of Brigitte Bardot, Sophia Loren and Marilyn Monroe.

These three stars started their careers as sex kittens, but went on to develop other aspects of their personality or screen persona.

Brigitte Bardot was spotted by director Roger Vadim on the cover of Elle magazine, and she married him in 1952. In his directorial debut, "And God Created Woman" (1956), she launched a new "girlishly erotic" look that redefined sex appeal in the movies, and launched many imitators.

Nonchalant attitude

Brigitte's nonchalant attitude towards nudity and her seemingly uninhibited sensuality made her a big international star. In 1957, however, she divorced Vadim (who later married Jane Fonda and tried to make a sexy star out of her, with much less success).

In 1960, she won a following as an actress with Clouzot's "The Truth." Eventually, however, she retired from acting and started the Brigitte Bardot Foundation for the Protection of Distressed Animals, for which she auctioned off her jewelry. In 1985, the former sexbomb was awarded the French Legion of Honor!

Voluptuous beauty

For her part, Sophia Loren was a lush, voluptuous Neapolitan beauty in the '50s, a sexy starlet who was so determined to make it big in the movies that she was prepared to do almost anything to get noticed.

Luckily for her, she was discovered by producer Carlo Ponti when she was only 15, and he charted a more progressive career course for her that eventually stressed her acting ability rather than her pneumatic physical assets.

Italian films

She married him in 1957, left him in 1962,

German film studio gears up for new epic

POTSDAM, Germany—After the Oscar-winning success of "The Pianist," Germany's venerable Babelsberg film studio outside Berlin is set to start shooting its next hoped-for blockbuster, "Around the World in 80 Days."

Shooting begins April 16 for the movie, in which karate ace Jackie Chan is the adventurer who bets he can circumnavigate the world in 80 days.

16,000 hopefuls

Two weeks ago, some 16,000 hopefuls turned up at the Babelsberg studio in Potsdam, southwest of Berlin, bidding for one of the 6,000 jobs on offer as extras.

Babelsberg spokesman Felix Neunerling said the new production showed that the studio was "on the right track" following Roman Polanski's "The Pianist," which won Oscars for best director, best actor and best screenplay.

Founded in 1912, the Babelsberg studio was closely associated with some of the early greats in films, such as director Fritz Lang, before being overtaken by the Hollywood machine.

Economic slump

The studio has been hit hard by the economic slump in eastern Germany but the French group Vivendi Universal, which owns Babelsberg, has said it is to continue its investment in the site for at least five more years.

"There was never any concrete question to the contrary," Neunerling said, adding that Vivendi had always denied speculation that it might pull out.

AFP

BARDOT. Seemingly uninhibited sensuality

MONROE. Ultimate screen goddess.

Childlike vulnerability

Finally Marilyn Monroe is regarded as "the ultimate screen goddess." Like Bardot, she combined eroticism with a childlike vulnerability that kept even her hottest portrayals from looking sleazy.

She first made her mark in "The Asphalt Jungle" (1950), and reached her apotheosis as the definitive blonde siren in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Then, like Loren, she began to focus more on her thespic talent than on her physical allure, and is best remembered for "Some Like It Hot," "Bus Stop," and "The Misfits."

Tragically, she died in 1962—unlike Bardot and Loren, who continue to be regarded as celebrities to this day. Even in death, however, Marilyn eclipses them all.

and they remarried in 1966. Under his tutelage, she started in Italian films and went to Hollywood to co-star with the famous likes of Cary Grant, Frank Sinatra and Charlton Heston.

She also made films in England, including a comedy with Peter Sellers and Charlie Chaplin's last feature film, "Countess from Hong Kong." However, her best work was in Italy with Vittorio de Sica, whose "Two Women" (1960) won her a best actress Oscar.

De Sica also teamed her up with Marcello Mastroianni in "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" and "Marriage Italian Style," which were so successful that they co-starred in 10 other movies.

'Dirty Pretty Things' bares ethnic London immigrants' miserable lives

By Shasta Darlington

VENICE—In Stephen Frears' new thriller "Dirty Pretty Things," the British director turns the camera on London's seedy underbelly, a world of illegal immigrants and shady crimes "that will terrify many people who think they know England."

Alternative universe

"It's about an alternative universe. You can see what desperate lives people live," the 61-year-old director said in an interview.

The story centers on a Nigerian illegal immigrant working as a night porter who stumbles on evidence of a bizarre murder and an underground organ trafficking ring. Together with a Turkish chambermaid, played by France's Audrey Tautou ("Amelie"), he tries to solve the crime.

The movie shows the miserable lives of some immigrants to London and the lengths to which they will go to be accepted into mainstream society.

"Britain wasn't always like this and people have terrible trouble accepting it," said Frears.

Novel

The movie is based on a novel by Stephen Knight, who told reporters in Venice that while it is not a true story, the characters are based on real people and that organ trafficking that exploits desperate immigrants "is a reality." "Dirty Pretty Things" also stars Chiwetel Ejiofor, who is himself the son of immigrants, in the role of Okwe the night porter, and Spanish actor Sergi Lopez as Sneaky, the sleazy

Little acting experience

Frears jokes that he chose a bunch of experienced actors who didn't speak English and a bunch of English actors who had very little acting experience to star in his movie.

"I must be crazy," the acclaimed director of "High Fidelity," "Dangerous Liaisons" and "My Beautiful Laundrette" said.

Frears, never shy about breaking down cultural barriers, said he felt compelled to do this film to show that "England is such a divided country and there aren't any connections between the two halves of London."

"These aren't the people you usually see in an English film, it's completely new territory, fresh and modern," he said.

The movie was shot mostly at night, often in cramped and dingy hotel rooms, emphasizing the message that "the things we take for granted, like fresh air, space and love, are luxuries." But Frears says people will have to start accepting this other side of England.

"These things change slowly but in the end you can't stop things changing, it just happens and you can't stop it," he said.

Miyah's prizewinning story

NINE-YEAR-OLD Miyah D. Queliste of Pagsanjan, Laguna has an unusual name. Parents Virgilio and Amalia said they were so sure their second child would be a boy that they had names for a son but none for a daughter. Born frail, the mother recalled sighing that "maya-maya na lang" their daughter had to be brought to a doctor. A variation of maya-maya became the girl's name. Queliste's award for her story in Filipino, "Si Pipit at ang Makukulay na Basura," couldn't have come at a better time. Although willing to do anything to earn a living, Virgilio, who drives a pedicab, buys and sells junk, and repairs umbrellas and LPG stoves, has found the going rather rough lately.

His pedicab broke down, affecting his livelihood. But the religious family did not despair, believing that something good would happen. Miyah's victory seems to be exactly what they hoped for. So, the family wants to donate part of her prize money to their church, the Dingin Baptist Church.

The young Queliste, a Grade IV pupil at Maulawin Elementary School in Pagsanjan, Laguna, talks about the benefits of recycling in her story, saying something beautiful can be made from trash.

Her characters are the animals her family has, except for the pipit, because she wants something that "nakakainit sa matatanda at bata."

Top winners

Miyah, Andionne Celeste Parlade, 12, and John Riza G. Gabason, 12, will be honored as this year's top winners in RCBC's 9th Kuwentong Kalikasan, Katha ng Kabataan (KKK) at 5 p.m. on April 14 at the Carlos P. Romulo Auditorium Podium 4, RCBC Plaza.

This year's board of judges was chaired by Rizalinda Labanda, president of the Reading Association of the Philippines. Members are Emily Abrera, chair of McCann Erickson; Karina Bolason, president, Anvil Publishing; Hermie Beltran of the GCP and writer-pediatrician Dr.

Luis Garmaitan.

Here is Miyah's short story:

"Si Pipit at ang Makukulay na Basura"

Isang araw, mangang gumising si Pipit. Ang alwalas ng paligid, wika niya. Subalit natanaw niya ang mga kalat. "Manoka, tigilan ma na yang kakakaykay," saway ni Pipit.

Sabay dating ni itik na pitik ng pitik sa mga balat ng kendi, bote ng softdrinks, balat ng Chippy at sirang parol na gawa sa straw at iba pa. "Iapon mo na lang yan diyar," sabi ni Manoka, "O sige," sagot ni itik.

Paglabas ni Pipit ay nagulat siya. "Abal, napakarami na namang kalat, ang kaya ang pwede kong gawin sa mga ito?"

Flower vase

Makalipas ang ilang araw, nagulat sina Manoka at itik. "Kay gaganda't makukulay ang mga dekorasyon mo, Pipit," ang sabi ng dalawa. Kurtinang gawa sa straw, balat ng kendi na ginawang bulaklak, gunup-gupit na balat ng Chippy na ginawang unan, at boteng softdrinks na ginawang flower vase!

Nagdatingan naman ang mga kapit-bahay at sinabi nila, "Pipit, maaari mo ba kamung igawa ng gunyan? Babayaran ka namin sa tamang halaga." "Aba oo," sabi ni Pipit.

Kaya't humiling ni Pipit kay Manoka at itik na siya'y tulongan. Ilawang-tawa namang punyag ang dalawa. Nasip nilang nakatulong na silang mahawasan ang basura, gaganda pa ang paligid.

Mula noon naging magkakabitigan na sila!

The natural law

WE found an interesting new feature in the Gulf News Tabloid titled "The Raw Truth—How Modern Diet Denies Us Life-giving Enzymes." The article focused on the importance of eating food rich with enzymes—naturally raw and unprocessed food. Excerpts:

Microwave oven

"Just two seconds in a microwave oven is enough to kill all the living enzymes in food. Enzymes are absolutely essential for every aspect of human life, from digestion to fighting diseases. Moreover, all forms of cooking destroy enzymes, as do canning, pasteurizing, balancing, sterilizing, irradiating and refining processes. So, for many people eating the modern western diet, the occasional apple or side salad may be the only food containing enzymes that they ever eat!"

"What are enzymes, and why are they so important to our health? They are complex catalysts for almost every biochemical process that takes place in the body. All enzymes are destroyed at temperatures above 118 degrees F."

"There are at least 3,000 enzymes, and they fall into three major classifications. THE NATURAL 17

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): You would really like to spend most of today daydreaming. You long for "pie in the sky" situations that will take you away from your predictable routine. Good luck.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): You might get caught up in some truly wild ideas today, probably at work. This will happen if somebody appeals to your idealistic side.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Be wary of ideas today. You can't put others up on a pedestal. Everybody puts his or her pants on one leg at a time, just like you.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22): Be careful about any kind of negotiations today, especially about shared property or shared responsibility for someone. Discussions about wills, inheritances and estates are confusing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): People are likely to ask you for extra help today. Even though you want to help, you do have to stay in the real world.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): This is not a good day for financial negotiations, trying to split something fairly or discussions about romantic liaisons. Confusion and misunderstandings are rampant.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Try to keep all your communication clear today. There is a general confusion out there that causes misunderstandings or makes you act evasively and deceptively.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): It's hard to get the straight story from somebody at work today. You don't want to be taken advantage of, and you don't want to be callous either. (Tough call.)

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19): Be careful of business dealings, contracts, negotiations and agreements. According to the experts, even in the best of communications only 40 percent gets back and forth. Today it's half that.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): You have a strong desire to talk to family members now, however, today is a very poor day to do so. Mercury, the planet of communications, is on bad terms with fuzzy Neptune. That's why your conversations are like talking to someone through a mask.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): Avoid important agreements today. You will not be able to assess things correctly. Furthermore, you will not be able to defend your own position as you should.

'Old School' is smarter than the average college comedy

By Christy Lemire

NEW YORK—"Old School" is the first film to feature Snoop Dogg and James Carville—not in the same scene, unfortunately, but hey, there's always room for a sequel.

But it's even more remarkable for what it doesn't feature: mean-spirited, gross-out humor.

Birthday

Sure, things get a little raunchy, as you'd expect from a movie about three guys in their 30s who form a fraternity. There's KY Jelly wrestling to celebrate the birthday of the oldest frat brother, who's turning 89. Frank (Will Ferrell), one of the group's founders, ends up streaking through town after guzzling a series of beer bong. And Mitch (Luke Wilson), the fraternity's "Godfather," achieves that status only after coming home early one day and finding his girlfriend (Juliette Lewis) involved in a kinky threesome.

But "Old School" is smarter than the average college comedy, with a talented, likable cast. It's quick and light on its feet, and it doesn't beat the same stupid jokes into the ground. It's almost kinda—sweet.

Crossroads

Longtime buddies Mitch, Frank and Beanie (a fast-talking, scene-stealing Vince Vaughn) find themselves at a crossroads about a decade after graduating from college. Mitch has just broken up with his girlfriend and is unhappy with his job. Frank is a newlywed but his marriage is already on the rocks. And Beanie is married with two kids (Leah Remini from television's "The King of Queens" plays his wife) and a successful chain of stereo equipment stores, but he's bored.

When Mitch moves into a house on their old college campus, Frank and Beanie immediately take over in a desperate attempt to cling to their youth and freedom. After only their first raging kegger—where Snoop Dogg takes the stage and gets his rap on for hundreds of hammered students—uptight Dean Pritchard (Jeremy Piven) tries to kick them out of the house and use the place for college purposes. AP

Juliette Binoche plays journalist covering South Africa's Truth Commission

CAPE TOWN, South Africa—French actress Juliette Binoche said Thursday she found portraying a journalist covering South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission "emotional and demanding."

Award-winning novel

Binoche is costarring with the American actor Samuel L. Jackson in a film currently being shot in Cape Town, based on the award-winning novel "Country Of My Skull" by Antjie Krog.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission, which closed down in 1998, investigated political crimes committed during the decades of racist apartheid rule in South Africa in an attempt to heal the wounds of that era.

Amnesty

Officials maintained that South Africa could not move into a peaceful future without understanding its past and granted amnesty to perpetrators willing to tell the truth about their crimes.

"(The film) is about the horror," Binoche said.

John Boorman, the movie's British director, told reporters that the movie would do justice to the country's painful past, the South African Press Association reported.

Period of transition

"Everyone is conscious of what the (commission) has been for South Africa in this period of transition," director Boorman said. "We are all determined to make it as accurate and serious as we can." AP

The natural law

The largest number are the metabolic enzymes, which play a role in all bodily processes, including maintenance of the immune system. In the second category are the 22 digestive enzymes, which help digest food in the mouth, stomach and intestines.

Pioneer

"Dr. Edward Howell, a pioneer in enzyme research, observed that humans and animals on a diet comprised largely of cooked food have an enlarged pancreas, the organ which produces digestive enzymes, up to three times the size of people on an all-natural diet.

Dr. Howell was emphatic on the importance of enzymes in the health process: "There is no other mechanism in the body except enzyme action to protect the body from any hazard. Hormones do not 'work.' Vitamins do not 'work.'"

Dr. Howell has formulated the sobering axiom that the length of one's life is inversely proportional to the rate of exhaustion of your enzyme potential. Put simply, eating raw, enzyme-rich food decreases the rate of exhaustion of your enzyme potential and gives you health, energy and long life.

Intestinal tract

"When enzyme levels are low, food cannot be properly digested. The intestinal tract becomes congested with partially digested food particles, like a clogged sewer pipe. Undigested food particles cling to intestines, forming walls of encrustation that block vitamins and minerals from being absorbed by the body, and begin to putrefy and become toxic.

"Bacteria and parasites begin to flourish and live in the bowel. Eventually, this condition creates holes in the lining of the intestines, allowing partially digested food particles, toxins, bacteria and parasites to seep through the bowel wall and into the bloodstream, a condition referred to as leaky gut syndrome."

Therefore, we should cut down on the cooking process and eat more fresh fruits, vegetables and juices! Fresh and raw—that's the natural law.

HAYEK. Did "anything and everything" to put her dream on film.

'Frida' is Salma Hayek's cinematic labor of love

By Nestor U. Torre

WHEN Mexican actress Salma Hayek first "went Hollywood" in movies like "Desperado" and "From Dusk Till Dawn," industry observers dismissed her as yet another stereotypical Latin spitfire. They figured that, like most other bombshells from south of the border, she would quickly vanish, practically without a trace.

Big surprise

Well, it turns out that Salma had a big surprise in store for them. Not only hasn't she disappeared as a film performer, but she's even added film and TV producing to her bag of tricks, and was nominated for an Oscar for Best Actress for her 2002 starlet, "Frida."

The film chronicles the life Mexican artist Frida Kahlo shared with the famous muralist Diego Rivera, as well as her controversial affair with Leon Trotsky and her romantic entanglements with women.

Salma, a longtime fan of Frida Kahlo, did "anything and everything" to put her dream on film. She convinced Alfred Molina to play Diego Rivera, and Geoffrey Rush to portray Leon Trotsky.

Impressed

Armed with her powerful lead cast, she took "Frida" to Miramax's Harvey Weinstein. Impressed by Clancy Sigel's script, as well as Salma's devotion and tenacity, Weinstein agreed to bankroll the project and got Tony Award winner Julie Taymor to direct.

After years of slammed doors, "Frida" finally began production in 2001, and Salma could finally breathe a sigh of relief.

She shares, "I expected that the film would say something fantastic about Mexico and this truly extraordinary woman, but it gave me even more, something that I was not counting on. It was an extra present. It proved to me how loved I was by my friends, who did so much to help me make my dream a reality."

Inseparable

Once virtually unknown outside of Mexico, Kahlo is now world-famous, thanks to the more than 100 books written about her and Rivera. She's celebrated because she was able to fuse the personal, artistic and political in an organic and brutally honest way, to the extent that her life and art became inseparable.

"The love of Frida and Diego lasted because it was real," director Julie Taymor observes. "It began with mutual respect for each other as artists and comrades in spirit, and grew into a profound intellectual, artistic and erotic attraction."

Full of courage

For Hayek, the key to the couple's love and art was their "willingness to find out who the other person was—and who they were themselves. Frida was so full of courage to be who she was and to take life as it came, and to enjoy every second of it intensely—even the suffering. That's why she's such an inspiration to me. Her passion made me passionate!"

Hayek's passion continues to peak even after "Frida." She has since starred and co-produced the showtime movie, "In the Time of the Butterflies," in which she was nominated for a Critics' Choice award.

Directorial debut

She is producing and directing "The Maldonado Miracle," starring Peter Fonda, Mare Winningham and Latin singer Ruben Blades. The Showtime production is Hayek's directorial debut.

And she will star in Robert Rodriguez's "Once Upon a Time in Mexico" with Antonio Banderas and Johnny Depp. Clearly "Frida" has helped Salma Hayek gain the respect in Hollywood that she's been trying to get for almost 10 years!

'Spider' is an unforgettably disturbing viewing experience

By Matt Wolf

NEW YORK—Few will quickly forget the opening shot of "Spider," the David Cronenberg film that has been deftly adapted from Patrick McGrath's 1990 book.

Platform

A train sputters into a London railway station, disgorging its passengers. And as the camera pans down the platform, one catches a first glimpse of the muttering, abject title character, the shuffling schizophrenic played by Ralph Fiennes.

It's an eerie and startling start to a no less unusual film, one which—perhaps par for the course with the director who gave us "Crash" and "eXistenZ"—is unlikely to be to everyone's taste. But those who stick with it should find "Spider" an unforgettably disturbing experience in its ability to dig deeply and unsentimentally into one man's damaged mind.

What led the tellingly nicknamed Spider to this sorry state? In an unusual case of a novelist adapting the film version of his book himself, McGrath weaves his own ever-tightening narrative web. The movie begins by focusing on the adult Spider, who's been institutionalized for years, adjusting to a halfway house of sorts overseen by the stern Mrs. Wilkinson (Lynn Redgrave).

FIENNES. Plays the abject title character as a shuffling schizophrenic.

Traumatized boy

Before long, "Spider" spins backward two decades to show him as a traumatized boy (10-year-old Bradley Hall) in a household ruled by his gruff working-class father (Gabriel Byrne) and the fond mother (Miranda Richardson) whom the father murdered.

Or maybe not; the delusional Spider, we soon learn, isn't all that reliable when it comes to telling the truth.

To reveal much more would give the game away, although one can safely report Richardson's adroit juggling of three roles.

Released on a limited basis in December to qualify for the Academy Awards, "Spider" should have resulted in Oscar recognition for Richardson, since hers is among the finest female performances in a year full of them. (And so defiantly uncommercial a film could surely use every boost it can get.)

At the same time, cineastes will exult in Cronenberg's sheer craft in what easily constitutes this director's most insidiously unsettling film since 1988's "Dead Ringers"—and without the assistance of the kind of special effects much loved by the man who made "Naked Lunch," "The Fly" and "Scanners."

This movie, by contrast, finds the disquiet in an ostensibly straightforward shot of the familiar and spidery children's pastime, cat's cradle.

Hemingway letters to Dietrich donated to library

By Greg Frost

BOSTON—Thirty letters written by author Ernest Hemingway to screen siren Marlene Dietrich along with several early drafts of his stories and poems have been donated to the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum, the library announced on Monday.

Deborah Leff, director of the library in Boston, called the donation a "rich addition" to the center, which is already home to 95 percent of Hemingway's manuscripts and correspondence. Library staff acknowledged that they only learned of the documents' existence within the past few years.

Larger than life

"Here are two of the most iconic figures of the 20th century—one of the great American writers and one of the great actresses, both of them larger than life—and shared among them are these extraordinary, intimate and loving letters," Leff told Reuters.

The documents, which were given to the library by Dietrich's daughter, Maria Riva, will be made public in 2007.

Riva has kept them since her mother died in Paris in 1992.

Peter Riva, Maria's son, has seen the letters and said they depict a relationship of sincere "camaraderie" that was more than friendship, but fell short of an all-out physical romance.

"You read these letters and you come to understand that theirs was a relationship of firm, fast friendship based on an experience of the world they lived in," he said.

Unusual

"They could bare their souls in a way that was unusual then, and probably still is today."

How Tonton, other luminaries ended up in show biz

By Jocelyn Valle

SOME people are sure about what they want to do, only to find out later that they have a different purpose in life. Others take a detour from their chosen path, only to find their way back to the right track.

Different paths

Here are some lucky people who've taken different paths, but ended up in one destination—showbusiness.

Tonton Gutierrez always knew he'd end up in the biz. After all, he's the son of versatile actress Liza Lorena and former matinee idol Eddie Gutierrez, whose other children are likewise in the entertainment industry.

Problem was, he was exceedingly shy. He was already a young adult when he entered the movies, first as the perennial meek leading man in some Sharon Cuneta movies, and later in more interesting roles in diverse projects.

He found stardom on TV as one of the major players in the hit soap "Pangako sa 'Yo," and now is in Channel 7's "Habang Kapiling Ka."

Personality

He's learned to overcome his shyness and develop his personality. "Hindi kasi pwede sa show biz ang mahiyain," he points out.

Tonton considers winning a best-actor trophy for his portrayal of a mentally challenged young man in "Saan Nagtatago ang Pag-ibig" as a defining moment. He's proven that he's got more than his parents' acting genes going for him. He has his own unique qualities as a formidable actor.

Chito Roño's childhood dream was to be a director. In grade school, he was cast in a play titled "Sino ang Maysala," with his cousins as co-actors. He also remembers tagging along with his grandmother in her movie-watching forays.

In college, however, he enrolled in a pre-med course at the Ateneo just to be with his friends. But he got bored and decided to follow his heart's desire. At UP, he majored in broadcasting and got involved in theater work.

Then Chito went abroad for further studies in film. When he came back, he opted to promote experimental cinema in the country. He dared himself to make his first feature, "Private Show," in 1986. He embraced mainstream cinema only after 1992's "Narito ang Puso Ko," which became a winner both at the tills and in film awards tills.

His latest opus is the film version of Lualaba's powerful novel, "Dekada '70," and he'll soon start work on a film on the Balangiga massacre.

Youngest

Pido Lalimanno of the band Pido with Take One is the youngest in a family of seven kids. He was exposed to and later absorbed his siblings' varied musical tastes.

When he was in Grade 5, he joined and won a singing contest. At 13, he started playing the guitar. Three years later, he tried singing in folk houses.

But it was only in 1984, at age 18, when he realized that he belonged to the music world. He formed his first group, FM Band, with Rodel and Naldy Gonzales, which in turn gave birth to the now popular Side A band.

"I just love to see the audience delighted everytime my band and I play," he enthuses.

Julius Babao loves the movies, that's why he majored in film at the UP College of Mass Communication. But, upon graduation in 1991, he found work as a reporter on GMA-7's radio station, dzBB ("Emergency's") Arnold Clavio is a contemporary. A few months later, Julius realized that broadcast journalism was really for him.

Devastation

It was the time of the great lah-har devastation in Central Luzon, and Julius was right there. His life was in danger, but he chose to do his job. "Doon ko na-realize kung bakit nandito ako sa trabahong ito!" he exclaims.

Two years later, he moved to ABS-CBN, where he rose from news reporter ("TV Patrol") to anchor ("Hoy Gising") and then host ("Alas Singko y Medya," "Talk TV") and "Magandang Umaga, Bayan").

He hopes to finally direct his first movie soon!

Visual arts

Carlo Orosa had a wonderful time with La Salle Greenhill's popular performing group, Kundirana. In college, though, Carlo chose to pursue his interest in the visual arts.

But before he could earn his diploma from UST, the itch to perform lured him back to the stage. After waxing his self-titled debut album 1989, Carlo found his vocation. It has become not only a way to express his artistic self, but also to share his convictions.

His new mission in life led him to discover his other talents: acting in musical plays ("Joseph the Dreamer," "Little Mermaid") and managing a theater company (Trumpets). Carlo doesn't paint as much now, but he knows that he can always go back to it whenever he wants to.

Transformation

Douglas Quijano is credited with the transformation of former McDonald's crewmember Richard Gomez into one of show business' success stories (he has gone from lanky starlet to top actor, fashion icon and businessman).

He is also responsible for fast-tracking the careers of Joey Marquez, brothers Anjo and Jomari Yllana, Gelli de Belen and newer talents Wendell Ramos and Maricar de Mesa.

But Douglas never thought he'd get into talent management. "It just happened," he says. "I started as a writer then I went into PR. I also tried scriptwriting."

Then, one day, the late, great actress Charito Solis asked him to manage her career, and he proved to be great at it.

"But I'm more interested in discovering and building up stars ('Bagees' was Douglas' project for the then teenage Aga Muhlach)," he maintains. "Third lang ang management."

All of his talents get regular work and exposure, and he's never had major problems with them.

"I don't do contracts," he asserts. "If they want out, they just have to tell me. I don't collect their checks for them, either—that's their responsibility. Para walang gulol! Besides, I'm not good at organizing accounts."

THE "Titanic" soundtrack was so popular that it landed in the top 50 in the 1990s.

THE belief is that the "Chicago" album will do as well as "Moulin Rouge."

Four questions for Joe Satriani

By Chelsea J. Carter

LOS ANGELES—Guitar virtuoso Joe Satriani knows a thing or two about Grammy nominations, but he knows nothing about winning one of the music industry's highest honors.

Friends

Even his friends have poked fun at his Grammy-less streak, comparing him to soap opera star Susan Lucci, who finally won a best-actress Daytime Emmy after losing for 18 years straight.

After 12 nominations and no award, he wasn't expecting to break his losing streak with this year's nomination for best rock instrumental performance for "Starry Night."

"Since 1988, I've gotten nominations for every record. About five or six years into it, somebody brought up Susan Lucci and it sort of stuck," Satriani said in a phone interview. "Now every time Grammy time comes around, my friends start saying, 'It's Susan Lucci time.'"

He's still winless. The Flaming Lips won this year for "Approaching Pavonis Mons by Balloon (Utopia Planitia)," extending Satriani's losing streak to 13. Q&A.

After the success of Santana's Grammy-winning "Supernatural," would you consider pairing with vocalists?

I'm not quite sure it would be as artistically satisfying because I really do concentrate on development of melody and harmony.

Artistic freedom

But having said that, it's difficult to shake a stick at selling 15 million records and the artistic freedom that follows.

Do you find it odd that you've taught some of the biggest names in the industry and they've become more of a household name than Joe Satriani?

I don't find it odd at all. It's like me asking, Do you know who Bill Gates' professor was? Civilization moves forward because the students leapfrog the teacher.

SATRIANI. Still winless after 13 nominations.

What approach do you take with your students?

When you're a teacher and you see a 16-year-old Kirk Hammett sitting across from you and he wants to know what key is this in and how can I make a really cool song, you really have to surrender everything you know!

How do you choose your next project?

There are so many projects that I have written down in this book I carry around with me. It's in a little tattered book that seems to follow me around the world. It's been with me for a long time and some very cool records have come out of that little book.

Movie music makers put new spin on soundtracks

By Sue Zeldner

LOS ANGELES—It was the dead of night when Luke Eddins high-tailed it to a production studio after receiving a frantic call needing a Smashing Pumpkins-like song for DreamWorks' hit film "The Ring."

Unknown bands

"I'm a last-minute unsigned-song bounty hunter," said Eddins, a "song placer" and musician who started Luke Hits, a firm that matches unknown bands with film music supervisors.

"I rescue music supervisors by sifting through literally thousands of underdog bands. I mostly find tracks that sound almost identical to a song by a high-profile artist," he said.

Due to Eddins' late night call, fledgling band Wide Awake, from Austin, Texas, landed their song in "The Ring," which went on to top the box office when it opened last October.

Eddins' song placements have taken off recently amid a depressed soundtrack market and as makers of film, television and video games increasingly search for music in more imaginative and cost-effective ways.

High-profile artist

Obtaining the green-light to license a song from a high-profile artist for a film is often like pulling teeth—and, after finally getting the recording label, publisher, managers, attorneys and the artist to commit, a 30-second clip of a song can cost the film in the neighborhood of $100,000.

After a soundtrack glut in the late 1990s, the music industry—which has seen sales decline overall for two straight years—has shied away from releasing so many movie albums, with the few hit soundtracks like "Moulin Rouge" and "O Brother Where Art Thou," standing out as exceptions.

"The heyday of soundtracks was in the 1990s when 'Titanic,' 'Armageddon' and other soundtracks routinely landed in the Top 50. Once soundtracks started to fizzle, the studios started to get cautious," said one industry executive.

Indeed, the album from Brannem's film, "8 Mile," was the only soundtrack to grace the Top 50 album sales chart for the week ended Dec. 15, compiled by Nielsen SoundScan.

Ranking No. 62 was the soundtrack to the latest "Lord of the Rings" installment, while "Lilo & Stitch" ranked No. 89.

Testament

To be sure, the success of "8 Mile" is largely a testament to Eminem's appeal, but also shows how the more successful soundtracks these days often have music not even in the film.

"There's a trend towards soundtracks that have the words 'music from and inspired by' in the title," says Dan Goldwasser, editor of SoundtrackNet, an online, soundtrack information site, who called the trend "disturbing."

"I'm a big fan of song-based and score-based soundtracks, but they have to do what is successful and marketable," he said.

Some moviemakers like Sandra Bullock, star and producer of the upcoming romance "Two Weeks Notice," decided to forego the depressed back-and-forth music market, choosing instead to release the movie's soundtrack to Pressplay, a new online music subscription service owned jointly by Vivendi Universal and Sony Corp.

Industry watchers cite a lot of buzz for the album of "Chicago," the musical based on the hit Broadway show of the same name, starring Renee Zellweger, Catherine Zeta-Jones and Richard Gere.

Hit soundtrack

The belief is "Chicago" will take off much like "Moulin Rouge," which had a hit soundtrack, selling more than two million units.

But others cite differences. The "Moulin Rouge" soundtrack, for instance, appealed to a pop audience because it featured covers of songs by artists like Madonna and Elton John, while "Chicago" features the movie's cast singing show tunes.

Some soundtrack experts feel that less is more, after the feeding frenzy of the 1990s when all the various record labels started up their own soundtrack units.

"The reality of the economy has caught up with consumers and we're looking and judging and trying to be as astute as we can. Getting a cool title song and riding the crest of the movie studio is no longer the key to a soundtrack success," Danny Bramson, president of Warner Music Group Soundtracks, said.

Warner Music is a unit of AOL Time Warner.

sion for one another.

"Marlene was this firm, independent, capable human being who just happened to be a beautiful woman, (and) Hemingway brought to the table the ability to celebrate and understand women in a way that she thought was the right way," he said. "He knew how women ticked."

Hemingway once said about Dietrich: "If she had nothing more than her voice, she could break your heart with it. But she has that beautiful body and the timeless loveliness of her face. It makes no difference how she breaks your heart if she is there to mend it."

Born in 1901, Dietrich became the quintessential blonde bombshell. She struggled through the roaring 1920s in local theaters as a singer and small-time actress before her breakthrough as a vamp in the movie "The Blue Angel" in 1930.

Masterpieces

Hemingway became the second most-translated author in English after Agatha Christie with masterpieces such as "The Sun Also Rises," "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "A Farewell to Arms," and "The Old Man and the Sea," which led to a Nobel Prize in the early 1950s.

Like his characters who exhibited grace under fire, he gained a reputation for drinking and womanizing (he married four times) and became a larger-than-life expatriate on the frontlines of battlefields and bullfighting rings. He committed suicide at age 61.

The donation comprises 30 letters, cards and other documents that both Hemingway and his wife, Mary, wrote to Dietrich from 1949 to 1959. They were mailed from Idaho, Kenya, Italy, and other disparate postmarks.

Apart from the correspondence, the donation also includes drafts of three Hemingway stories—"Across the River and Into the Trees," "The Good Lion," and "The Story of the Faithful Bull"—and two Hemingway poems, "First Poem to Mary in London" and "Poem to Mary."

Peter Riva said it is believed that the other half of the correspondence—Dietrich's letters to Hemingway—may still be in Cuba, where the author lived for several years. An effort is under way to bring more of the author's property back to the United States from the communist Caribbean island nation. Reuters

Gone for a whole month, Letterman returns with jokes about his ailment

By Frazier Moore

NEW YORK—After five weeks on sick leave, David Letterman returned to host CBS' "The Late Show" acting happy, jazzed and just a little bit wacky.

"I am still under the influence of high-powered pharmaceuticals," he explained Monday. "If it turns out the show goes great, I've still got the guy's number."

Infection

Letterman has been recuperating from a painful case of shingles, an infection of the nerve roots caused by the same virus that causes chickenpox.

"It hurt so much, I was Michael Jackson crazy," Dave raved.

With that in mind, the evening's Top 10 List summed up all the good things about shingles. It was a list of just one statement declaring there is nothing good about shingles—but expressing that sentiment in far more colorful terms.

With a series of guest hosts subbing for him since Feb. 26, Letterman may have been out of sight, but he hasn't been out of touch.

"You know how they cured my shingles?" he asked in a sly reference to the nation's current state of alert: "Duct tape!"

Proud smirk

Then, with a proud smirk, he added, "Thirty days it took me to get over the shingles—and according to (Secretary of Defense) Donald Rumsfeld, that's right on schedule."

He welcomed as his first guest Billy Crystal, who with dread amusement recalled his own case of shingles.

"I couldn't put a sheet on me!" said Crystal, who then took a close look at Letterman's eyes and chuckled, "Hey, you're really waxed."

For Letterman, who turns 56 on April 12, the evening was a happier version of the joyous welcome he got in February 2000, when he returned to the Ed Sullivan Theater after missing five weeks for heart bypass surgery.

At the time he brought onstage his six doctors and two nurses from New York-Presbyterian Hospital and tearfully thanked them for saving his life.

Monday night, pretending to get emotional, he introduced his dermatologist who diagnosed and treated his shingles.

"I'm back from my annual bypass!" Dave told his fans. AP

Polanski's Oscar win may ease filmmaking for exile

By Anthony Breznican

LOS ANGELES—Roman Polanski's surprise Oscar win for directing "The Pianist" has returned Hollywood's attention to a filmmaking career that includes at least two films considered cinematic classics, "Rosemary's Baby" and "Chinatown."

Tremendous interest

"There is tremendous interest in Roman and what he's doing next," his agent, Jeff Berg, said Tuesday, although Polanski has yet to decide on a new project.

Berg refused to say who has approached him about working with Polanski, but pointed out that the filmmaker has never wanted for celebrity colleagues, even in the years since a 1977 sex crime made him flee to France.

Waterloo starred in Polanski's 1986 comedy "Pirates," Harrison Ford in 1988's "Frantic" and Johnny Depp in 1999's "The Ninth Gate."

With a hat on his hands, the 69-year-old Polanski should be able to attract A-list stars more easily than ever. "Actors are used to traveling," Berg said.

Deeply moved

In a brief statement issued in Paris, Polanski said, "I am deeply moved to be rewarded for the work which relates to the events so close to my own life, the events that led me to comprehend that art can transform pain."

"The Pianist" drew on Polanski's experiences from childhood. A Polish Jew, he escaped from Krakow's ghetto and lived off the charity of strangers until reuniting with his father years later. His mother died at the Auschwitz death camp. Polanski's pregnant wife, Sharon Tate, was brutally murdered by Charles Manson's followers in 1969 in her Los Angeles home. AP

'Magnificat' in pre-Holy Week staging tonight

IN the course of its successful run, Ryan Cayabyab's hit religious musical, "Magnificat," has showcased the performance as the Blessed Virgin Mary of only four outstanding singer-actresses—Pinky Marquez, Dulce, Jingle Buena and Rossana Ordoñez.

Pinky and Dulce alternated in the lead role when the musical was first performed, and inspired the other members of the cast not only with their talent, but also with their devotion to the musical, and their humility.

When Dulce left the show, Jingle Buena, an original member of the cast, was tapped to play Mary in some performances, and her work was also impressive. Later, Rosanna (now Tex) Ordoñez also moved up and performed the plum role, to similar acclaim.

The production is grateful to all four exceptional singer-actresses for keeping the show's level of performance high through the years.

Tonight at the Cuneta Astrodome, "Magnificat" will be presented anew in a fundraising performance sponsored by ABC Media Resources, and Jingle will play the role of Mary.

She is thrilled to once again portray the mother of Jesus Christ, a role that tops her list of musical-theater portrayals in terms of significance, challenge and personal commitment.

Playing the similarly challenging role of Jesus is Rito Asilo, who shares Jingle's personal relationship with "Magnificat" and its inspiring themes. The musical means so much to him that he's "ready to drop everything to perform in it, anytime, anywhere!"

The cast of "Magnificat" is particularly happy to perform the show tonight because it's a pre-Holy Week presentation that they hope will help viewers focus on the passion of Christ, and on Mary's devotion to her Son and to His all-important mission in the world. ABC Media may be reached at 895 7709 and 896-4074.

Feedback

Danny Holmsen writes to greet Don Romeo S. Villonco and Jose Laurel IV on their recent birthday (April 10):

"The V in LVN Pictures stands for Villonco. One of his children, Cherrie Pie, was a top model. Don Romeo is religious and generous. He also thinks that God the Father is being overlooked, so I hear that he's planning to build a church in His particular honor, and a CD dedicated to the Father is in the planning stage.

"As for Jose Laurel IV, he's a direct descendant of Pres. Laurel. He was a congressman and ambassador, but has retired to spend more time with his family. We both grew up in Paco and celebrated our birthday separately, although we lived only a block away from each other—until we finally compromised and threw joint parties!"

Co-workers see a bright future ahead for Yul Servo

By Agnes P. de Guzman and Ronald G. Mangubat

SERVO. Exceptional talent.

FOR someone who is relatively new in the entertainment industry, actor Yul Servo has already earned the respect of a lot of his co-workers. "Blame" it on his exceptional talent, right attitude, a good manager, and sheer luck.

Awards

After acting in only two movies, this simple Bulakeño and criminology graduate has already won three best actor awards. For "Barang West Side," Servo won as Best Actor in both the Cinemania and Brussels International Film Festivals. For his second film "Laman," Servo was named best actor at the Star Awards for Movies.

When he was first introduced to director Maryo J. de los Reyes, Servo rarely spoke.

Mitch Valdes gives us many reasons to laugh

By Mona Gonzalez

I HAVE just made a discovery: If I were to look for a good night's entertainment, I would eschew music. Not that there's anything wrong with a good song. Music can lull, relax, soothe.

Giggly feeling

But I'd rather laugh. Songs you can hear on the radio, or play on the CD. But laughter produces ripples of memory—long after the show.

And yet, laughter without music is easily forgotten. Deep down inside, we are still children. We all prefer a joke with a song.

That's why I like watching Mitch Valdes' shows. She can make you guffaw even louder than she does (and that's saying quite a lot). Then, she can lull—or sometimes, rock—you with a song.

Socialites

That's what happened last March 17 in the show, "Mitch at Merks" at Greenbelt 3, Makati.

In Mitch's show, she remembered her old haunts along Roxas Blvd.—Flames, Eduardos, Rene's et al.; the old bands and singers—Joey Smith, Circus, Pilita, Carmen Patena; the old "happenings."

British accent

But "Mitch at Merks" was not just about remembering. She talked about the funny side of cable TV, replete with British accent (the news sounds better that way, she says).

Then Mitch talked about a typical coffee shop in New York (and a typical waitress), and the difficulty of ordering food amid so many choices. Finally, she told the audience what it's like to get a mammogram. In great detail. Yes, that can be funny, too. In fact, it was the night's highlight. She really brought the house down!

Mitch is great mimic, a talented singer with a powerful voice, and a happy dancer. Her show was fast-paced, so although it was long, the hours had a way of flying.

Lighthearted look

Mitch provides a lighthearted look at ourselves—the way we used to be, and what's going on in our lives now. There's even a peek into our future possibilities.

Eschewing Saddam, Iraq, bombs, in-fighting, gossip, of vice intrigue, the hole in our pocket, the fact that you just hate your job or are in desperate need of one, Mitch will make you forget—but not take you away.

She'll point your sights on the lighter side of life, and focus on things that are funny and true. She'll give you a reason to laugh, and leave you with enough songs to remember—long after the show has ended.

national agency he said had approached Rai, a former Miss World.

Discussions were reportedly delayed after Rai fractured her leg in a car accident on the set of her latest movie. The casting scouts were on the set when the accident occurred, Singh said, according to the Times.

Singh's phone went unanswered through Friday.

Hospital

Rai is currently recovering in a hospital in Bombay, home to the world's most prolific movie industry known as Bollywood.

Rai, popularly known as "Ash," recently starred in "Devdas," a film about doomed love that was India's Oscar entry in the foreign film category.

She had earlier told reporters that she was in talks with studios in the United States and was planning a Hollywood movie this year. AP

Director Lav Diaz recalls: "I didn't know anything about him, so gamble talaga yan. But after eight long months of shooting in New York, naintindihan nyang mangi ang character na pino-portray niya, that's why he was able to deliver."

Another person who has fond memories of Servo in New York is Joanne Baniaga, who was part of the production team of "Barang West S.d.e." Baniaga recalls that it was Servo's first time in the Big Apple and he was awed by everything he saw.

Serious actor

But, he was also a serious actor in the making. "Bibili siya ng mga tapes niya Al Pacino at Dustin Hoffman at punag-aaralan niya ang mga pelikula nila."

Albert Martinez, who has worked with Servo in "Laman," describes his co-star as quiet and deep. "He comes to the set prepared, he memorizes his lines, and he has a passion for acting."

Yul's colleagues predict that he will become an important actor in Philippine cinema. But they advise him to choose his roles well, have the right attitude—and sustain his passion!

SATURDAY Special

TV has become an arena for amateurs

By Frazier Moore

NEW YORK—Used to be, when something was inadequate or downright lame, you would dismiss it as "amateurish."

"Man," you'd sneer, "that was amateur hour!"

But on American television these days, amateurism is in full flower—and applauded.

Lacerating approval

"Amateur hour" literally describes "Star Search" and, of course, the hit "American Idol," where each Whitney Houston knockoff faces Simon Cowell's lacerating appraisal.

But TV's rank amateurism has its grip on unscripted-but-staged fare overall, the sort of programming that can confer instant stardom on such gloriously unaccomplished amateurs as Evan ("Joe Millionaire") Marriott.

Amateurism even accounts for the collaborative role widely granted to viewers in this age of interactive media.

"We want to know what you think," the audience is told, with no expertise required—or much else. (Any viewer with a pulse and a telephone will be recognized by "American Idol," right along with its professionally knowledgeable judges.)

Identity crisis

A decade ago, critic James Wolcott wrote a piece for The New Yorker magazine lamenting the "identity crisis" with which TV entertainment was afflicted. "The barriers between professional and amateur have been eaten away. Anybody can get into the act."

What set him off in December 1993—notably the skanky guests populating daytime talk—is yesterday's news. But Wolcott may have been prescient when he imagined "in a few years the hour-long primetime drama itself will be a rare species, replaced by cheaper, 'reality' programming." The situation he diagnosed then is today an epidemic.

TV mainstays like "Cops," "Real World" and "World's Funniest Home Videos" have been joined by ever more opportunities for ordinary people to get into the act. You can eat a horse's rectum on "Fear Factor" or audition soul mates on a dating game. You can wage high-stakes exhibitionism in a house ("Bog Brother") or in the wilds ("Survivor").

On "Are You Hot?" you can stand in your skivvies before Homestead Czar Lorenzo Lamas while he deconstructs your abs with his laser-beam Plaw Finder.

What a godsend these shows are for the networks! Scripted dramas and comedies make such extravagant demands on a production budget. "Reality TV" alleviates the need for those costly performers and those pesky writers and directors.

Rain forest

Nonetheless, certain TV professionals are unwilling to leave amateurism to the amateurs. Behold battling demi-stars like Emmanuel Lewis or Melissa Rivers as they share a house ("The Surreal Life") or an Australian rain forest ("I'm a Celebrity—Get Me Out of Here!") in an effort to demonstrate that, at heart, they're just as ordinary as you.

In short, the barriers have been eaten away. And, for the moment, the New Egalitarianism is a smash.

Rather than the distancing effect the audience might feel from a truly skillful performance (the entertainer can do something the audience can't), the new TV paradigm puts the audience on par with the entertainers, as everyone sinks to amateur status.

Sure, fans of so-called reality TV defend it for its underlying truth. Ryan Sutter, the chosen mate of Trista Rehn on "The Bachelor," explained its appeal (if a bit redundantly) as "real people with real feelings and real emotions."

But the truth is, storytelling on "reality TV" observes the same traditions as any scripted show.

For instance, Evan gave "Joe Millionaire" a heartwarming finish by choosing the "good" girl (Zora) over the "bad" girl (Sarah). Not the least bit believable, it was the sort of comfy, satisfying ending you've seen a thousand times before. And it proves that the best way to enjoy reality TV is with the age-old prescription for watching any drama: a willing suspension of disbelief.

The new paradigm puts the audience on par with the entertainers

Resolution

How else to accept the bombshell Trista-picks-Ryan resolution of "The Bachelor"? As depicted on the series, these two individuals have almost nothing in common. They have only a rudimentary acquaintance with each other after a courtship grounded in make-believe.

What holds this pair together? "An unspoken chemistry," Trista told reporters last week.

That's a good explanation for TV love. But now that these lovers' TV show is over, why should we believe they exist outside of it? What makes Trista and Ryan—whoever they may be in real life—big news? AP

Eating healthy at Gloria Maris

A FEW years back, the most popular Chinese restaurant was Kowloon House. Dishes like sweet and sour pork, namaron rebosado, pe-ta-tun and fried rice were diners' top choices. Our Chinese restaurants have come a long, long way since then.

WORD OF MOUTH

Sandy Daza

Truly authentic

Today, many Chinese restaurants have sprouted all over, but only a handful can be considered truly authentic.

It has become common practice for those restaurants to employ chefs from Hong Kong. This is one of the surest ways of acquiring that authentic taste. Importing some ingredients has also become standard.

I remember, every Christmas season, Dr. Joey De Los Santos and Atty. Rey Francisco would reserve a table for us at Gloria Maris restaurant in Greenhills. There, we would have Shanghai crab (this is a must when they have it).

The moment the dish arrived, all conversation would stop and it was as if we didn't know each other. We would only talk again when the bill arrived. Those were some of my most memorable meals.

Dinner

There are two restaurants I consider consistently authentic: North Park and Gloria Maris. We had dinner at the Gloria Maris branch along Timog the other day. Not wanting to waste the great badminton workout we just had, I tried to order healthy dishes.

We started with the Chicken feet with black beans. Super scrapi! I use this as a basis for determining the prospects of our coming dishes.

We then ordered a nicely-cooked kangkong with Chinese bagoong. It had the mild aroma of bagoong and was not only delicious, but healthy as well. We also had Bean-curd roll, vegetables in a thin slice of bean curd, steamed and served in a bamboo steamer.

The Fish brisket in beancurd hot pot was a saucy dish that had mushrooms, fish filets,

'Hero,' 'Infernal Affairs' scoop HK film awards

By Carrie Lee

Past winner

Tony Leung, a past winner of the Cannes Film Festival best actor prize, won the award for best actor for his role in the critically acclaimed film "Infernal Affairs" as a police spy who infiltrates an underworld gang.

Leung beat another top contender, singer-cum-actor Leslie Cheung, whose suicide in Hong Kong last week saddened fans in Chinese-speaking communities round the world.

Four leading pop singers, dressed in black, sang one of Cheung's hit songs to pay tribute to him before the presentation ceremony began. The sense of gloom was deepened by the spread of the killer virus SARS, and some participants wore face masks.

"Infernal Affairs" grabbed seven of the 19 awards, including the most-coveted prizes of best film, director and actor. It also won for best supporting actor, film editing, screenplay, and original film score. The movie had earned 16 nominations.

Huge following

The blockbuster had a huge following across Asia, and was Hong Kong's top-grossing movie last year, chalking up more than HK$55 million ($7 million) at the box office.

"Hero," China's official entry in the Best Foreign Film category of this year's Academy Awards in the United States, also won seven honors—best cinematography, art direction, costume make-up design, original film song, and production choreography, sound design and visual effects.

The film, by renowned Chinese director Zhang Yimou, had 14 nominations but lost out to "Infernal Affairs" in the categories of best film and best director.

"Hero" female lead Maggie Cheung, a former winner of the best actress award at the Berlin Film Festival, lost out in that category on Sunday to Lee Sin Je, who was honored for her performance in ghost movie "The Eye." "Hero," the top-grossing Chinese movie in China and in several other Asian countries last year, was about China's first emperor, who unified the country in the third century B.C., and assassins trying to kill him.

Apart from Maggie Cheung its cast included Tony Leung, martial arts master Jet Li, and "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" princess Zhang Ziyi—who had been nominated for the best supporting actress award.

"HERO" won seven awards, but not the one for best film, which went to "Infernal Affairs."

Korean blockbuster

The Korean blockbuster "My Sassy Girl" won the best Asian film award.

The death of Leslie Cheung cast a long shadow over the ceremony.

The 46-year-old leapt out of a window of the Mandarin Oriental hotel, leaving a suicide note which newspapers said revealed emotional problems.

Cheung, who had been named best actor in the past, was one of the first Asian stars to play openly gay characters in films.

He was best known internationally for his role in "Farewell My Concubine," where he played a homosexual Chinese opera singer—a role which closely mirrored his life. The 1993 film scooped a series of awards, including the prestigious Palme d'Or at the Cannes Film Festival.

Schumacher continues to go small with 'Phone Booth'

By Christy Lamira

AUSTIN, Texas—It's hard to classify a Joe Schumacher film.

He's directed two critically acclaimed John Grisham adaptations ("A Time to Kill," "The Client") and been accused of destroying the Batman franchise ("Batman Forever," "Batman and Robin").

He's amassed hot young stars in such '80s ensemble films as "The Lost Boys" and "St. Elmo's Fire," the latter of which he co-wrote.

Goofy comedies

His earliest films were goofy comedies ("The Incredible Shrinking Woman," "D.C. Cab"), while his most recent have been about tougher topics: a snuff film ("8MM") and a stroke victim ("Flawless").

And one of his best-reviewed films was the little-seen "Tiger and" from 2000, about Army trainees preparing to fight in Vietnam, starring a then-unknown Colin Farrell.

The Irish actor is back with Schumacher for "Phone Booth" as a slick publicist who's the target of an unseen sniper, played by Kiefer Sutherland. Schumacher shot the thriller in 10 days, with the action taking place in and around a phone booth set in midtown Manhattan.

Allure

Working with Schumacher again was much of the allure of the film, Farrell said. He also appears in the director's upcoming "Veronica Guerin," starring Cate Blanchett in the true story of an Irish journal-

"Me and Joel had pretty good lingo together from day one (We) just seemed to get on pretty well," Farrell said recently in New York. "He just creates an environment where people want to work for him, work with him, an environment where it's safe to fail. And that's an important thing, I think, when you're acting."

"Phone Booth," which made its US premiere during last month's South by Southwest film festival in Austin, originally was scheduled to come out last November, but 20th Century Fox delayed its release because of last year's sniper killings.

It's the second Schumacher film that's been postponed because it was too uncomfortably similar to real life.

"Bad Company," starring Chris Rock and Anthony Hopkins as CIA agents who must stop a nuclear bomb from going off in Manhattan, was delayed after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

"When Sept. 11 happened, my first thought was, 'We shouldn't release this at all.' Why release a movie about a bomb in New York City? It just didn't feel right, but those decisions are not up to me," Schumacher said. "When you direct a movie, even though it says 'A Joe Schumacher Film,' it's owned by someone else."

This is the biggest lesson Schu-macher has learned after more than two decades as a director, a career he fell into relatively late in life. Now 63, he directed his first feature, "The Incredible Shrinking Woman," when he was 40.

Window dresser

Before that, he attended the Parsons School of Design in New York and was a department store window dresser. He also designed costumes for films in the 1970s, including Woody Allen's "Sleepers" and "Interiors."

But making movies fascinated him since his childhood in a poor section of New York. His father died when he was 4; his mother worked six days a week. The movie theater he could see from the back window of his apartment provided an escape from reality.

"One day your father's there, the next day he's not. I'm sure I was lonely and frightened, and these movies, they just solved everything and I could get swept away with those incredible stories and that world of sight and sound," he said. "And I think that I got something so wonderful from that, that I wanted to be part of it—not in it, but part of passing it on."

He also escaped from reality through substance abuse, which he speaks about candidly. He started drinking when he was 9, first tried drugs in his teens, and partied with Andy Warhol at Studio 54 in his 30s. He didn't get sober until he was 52.

"I was a drunk for a long time and I was a drug addict and a sex addict and a crazy guy. There's nothing to hide," Schumacher said.

Recovering addict

"Any recovering addict is always hoping that someone will hear your story and realize that you can get sober and you can have a great life."

Creating smaller movies—and not the summer smashes that brought him equal amounts of cash and criticism—is part of that life.

One of the most vocal critics of Schumacher's second "Batman," 1997's "Batman and Robin" starring George Clooney and Chris O'Donnell, was Harry Knowles, creator of the Austin-based "Ain't It Cool News" movie website.

He said the film ultimately served as a "how-not-to" adapt a comic book to the screen, because it was more concerned with catering to kids than telling a compelling story.

"This is a guy who can make complex dramas. He has that in him, so why does he treat this differently? If it's the studio, then walk off the project," Knowles said. "At that level, he ought to have autonomy."

Schumacher has done just that with the films he's made since then, including "8MM" and "Flawless."

Better person

"I think it's made me a better person and I hope it's made me a better director," he said. "I know I disappointed some people with 'Batman and Robin,' but the Grishams were huge successes. I love those movies. So it's not as if I'm ashamed of that work and I'm trying to cleanse myself. It's just that I didn't want to be the summer blockbuster king anymore. I wanted to tell other stories."

The next story he'll tell is "Phantom of the Opera," which he said Andrew Lloyd Webber first asked him to do after seeing 1987's "The Lost Boys." Schumacher said he's undaunted by the success of other recent musicals, including 2002's best-picture Oscar winner, "Chicago," and 2001's "Moulin Rouge!"

"Every movie stands on its own. If you make an action movie, you can't say 'Well, gee, look at the action movies that have made millions of dollars,'" he said. "All you can do is make the best movie you know how to make and then whatever's gonna happen is gonna happen." AP

Why men and women are different.

The fact that women can speak over 7000 words a day, and men listen with only one side of the brain, is just one of many differences between the sexes. Men and women have different needs which require specific ways of dealing with them.

That's why there are One-A-Day Special

Wellness Formulas, the multivitamins customized for the two sexes.

They played Jesus Christ in the movies

By Bela Cervantes

"IMAGINE, he played Christ, our Savior!" declared Barbara Perez when she recalled her having acted with Jeffrey Hunter. In 1962, the Hollywood hunk came to the Philippines to film "No Man Is An Island," a war film. For his native co-star, the Hollywood producers chose wide-eyed Barbara Perez of Sampaguita Pictures. Barbara was the Philippines' own Audrey Hepburn.

Gentleman

Barbara was in total awe of Jeffrey because "he was such a gentleman. He was so kind to me, as he was to everyone else on the set."

What better traits for an actor who played Christ in "King of Kings," the 1961 remake of the black and white, silent film classic directed by Cecil B. DeMille? The Nicholas Ray version had technology in its favor, so scenes were bigger, the music was stereophonic and its scenes were in Technicolor, although some critics insisted that de Mille's "superb storytelling and reverence for the subject matter" made the first version stand the test of time.

Surprise choice

Hunter was a surprise choice, since past productions opted for an actor who would be a pale, blond and stoically thin Christ. Jeffrey was dark-haired, athletic and therefore more credible as a carpenter and fisherman. His blue eyes were certainly magnetic and he played Christ with an everyday charm that made people want to follow him.

Never mind that Hunter was earlier known as a Hollywood pretty boy who had appeared in such films as "Beles On Their Toes," "Dreamboat" and "Princess of the Nile." Those fluffy flicks merely exploited his good looks and physique.

He had formal theater training, however, so he did appear in more respectable films like "The Searchers," "In Love and War" and the blockbuster "The Longest Day." Formerly married to actress Barbara Rush, Hunter was never able to top his portrayal of Christ. In fact, he died a man plagued by an unhappy second marriage, bad business decisions and alcohol abuse.

The original movie Christ was H.B. Warner, an actor who was later seen in smaller roles in such classics as "Lost Horizon," "It's A Wonderful Life" and "Mr. Deeds Goes To Town." The public associated Warner with the cinematic Christ until Hunter came along. However, little else is remembered of him.

So, was it bad luck to play Christ?

Cameo appearances

George Stevens cast respected Swedish actor Max Von Sydow as Christ in "The Greatest Story Ever Told," an overly long Biblical extravaganza marred by too many cameo appearances, including John Wayne as the Roman centurion charged with overseeing the crucifixion of Christ.

Max, as Christ, raised a few casting eyebrows because Von Sydow was associated with the morose cinematic classics of Scandinavian genius Ingmar Bergman. He was brilliant in many a Bergman classic like "Wild Strawberries," "The Seventh Seal" and "The Virgin Spring," which focused on the personal odyssey of modern man.

His Christ was mature, stoic and formidable, since Von Sydow has quite a screen presence and an imposing voice. He was never typecast as Christ, but went on to portray varied characters in other films.

Von Sydow played the "be-deviled" priest in "The Exorcist." He has also been a ruthless international executive, an intellectual terrorist, a sadistic Russ an spy, plus all kinds of villains plaguing heroes of the silver screen on both sides of the Atlantic.

He continues to be a busy actor, clearly proving that there is life after cinematic crucifixion, after all!

Miramax mulls new 'Guys and Dolls' movie

Rights

Miramax is seeking to buy rights for a "Guys and Dolls" movie to be produced by Craig Zadan and Neil Meron, who put together "Chicago," the source said, adding that while Miramax is near an agreement, a firm deal has yet to be secured.

Zadan and Meron held some rights to the musical, and Miramax is now looking to secure rights to the original Runyon short story on which the musical is based.

A Miramax spokesman declined to comment.

"Chicago," which stars Richard Gere, Renee Zellweger and Catherine Zeta-Jones, has wowed movie fans this year, won awards, and exceeded $100 million in domestic grosses.

Dark tale

"Chicago" debuted on Broadway in the 1970s and had a wildly successful revival in the 1990s. It tells a dark tale about a struggling actress (Zellweger) who rockets to fame after killing her lover, and is loaded with singing, dancing and familiar tunes like "All That Jazz" and "Razzle Dazzle."

"Guys and Dolls," too, is famed for its memorable musical numbers like "Luck Be a Lady," and "Sit Down, You're Rockin' the Boat." With music by Frank Loesser, "Guys and Dolls" was a highly successful Broadway show of the 1950s and made into a movie in 1955 with Marlon Brando, Frank Sinatra and Jean Simmons.

Hollywood has been waiting for the film studios to begin cranking out new musicals after the recent successes of "Moulin Rouge" last year and now "Chicago," but two musical hits doesn't necessarily mean moviegoers are in the mood to sing.

Musicals were a Hollywood staple of the 1940s, but began to fade from popularity in the 1950s. Over the decades, attempts to revive the cinematic art form have met with mixed success.

Losing paradise

FACE TO FACE

Inday Badiday

est with lush vegetation and the breathtaking Labasin Falls that flows into the river that runs through and feeds the entire place with life and energy.

Extravagant

Indeed, my dear child, in Villa Escudero, God has decided to be generous—even extravagant! This is evident not only in the bounty of nature everywhere you look, but also in the lavish smiles of the people there. Going to Villa Escudero is like being embraced by heaven.

And the place gave me a most unexpected but nonetheless precious gift—a much deeper appreciation of my being a Filipino. Actually, that's a laugh. Because, I confess, Filipiniana bores me. Anything that remotely suggests Philippine history and culture and mores triggers a phobic reaction in me that automatically makes me recoil and withdraw in haste.

But Villa Escudero changed all that. The guided tour around the place given by Mang Ado himself was a gem of an experience. Do you know, Clara, that the Villa Escudero Plantation and Resort is a self-contained, working plantation founded way back in 1872?

In 1890, it was acquired by Don Placido Escudero and his wife Doña Claudia Marasigan. Originally planted to sugarcane, it shifted to coconut in the early 1900s, when the couple's only son Don Arsenio Escudero managed it.

In the late 1800s, there were only six families living on the plantation. This has since grown to the present 130 families. Each family is allocated ample space for its own home and garden.

Natural beauty

It was in 1980 that the plantation was opened to the public. It has since developed an international reputation as a special, magical place where visitors can experience many aspects of Philippine life all in one day—its history, cuisine and music, as well as its natural beauty and the charm of its people. My dearest Clara, Villa Escudero is truly the Philippines personified.

For starters, there's the Chapel of the Ascension at the center of the village, where all the important events in the simple, serene life of the villagers revolve. There, too, is the Family Museum, which houses one of the country's most important collections, which is unmatched in diversity.

The museum's architectural design is based on a 16th-century Spanish-era church destroyed during the Battle of Manila in 1945. Inside is a treasure trove of religious artifacts—silver altars, gilded carrozas, icons of saints made of ivory, and other important pieces from the Spanish era—truly a rich testimony to the artistry and piety of the Filipino.

Galleon trade

There's also a delightful assortment of valuable objects from the galleon trade, such as oriental ceramics, costumes, rare coins, old furniture, dioramas of Philippine wildlife and ethnography, and many other items of interest from all over the world.

Still on Filipiniana Appreciation 101, the Escudero family mentors not only one of the country's most renowned cultural dance troupes but also one of our most talented native string and Maranao percussion groups. I truly enjoyed the colorful dances representing the different regions of the country, complete with dazzling costumes sewn by plantation seamstresses.

Memorable too was the food featuring special Escudero family recipes handed down through generations. What made the luncheon experience all the more enchanting was the fact that we had it by the waterfalls. The tables were placed right in the shallow stream and, as we ate, our feet were tickled by the cool, gurgling spring waters.

Dinner when evening crept in was something else. It was served at the Coconut Pavilion on the shoreline of Labasin river. Lifting melodies from serenaders made me recall happy memories of a beautiful past long gone; but forever alive in the heart.

Footnote

My dearest child, I am making it a point to tell you all this because, if the MMDA will have its way, the beauty of Villa Escudero shall soon be just a footnote in our memory banks.

As you know, Bayani Fernando is our garbage czar, and he has this idea to transform this paradise into the country's biggest trash can, dumping into it daily an estimated 80 tons of filth from Metro Manila and environs.

Clara, I don't know Fernando personally but I think he's a good man who only wants to do well in his job. But, why lay waste a place of immense beauty? Why ruin something that could have only been the work of the hand of God? Why destroy paradise?

As I write this, Bush and his coalition forces are destroying what remains of the place believed to have been paradise. That's horrible. But a similar horror is going to unfold if Fernando succeeds in his plan to destroy Villa Escudero.

Nature's bounty

Dear Clara, Mang Ado and the combined citizenry of Quezon and Laguna have banded themselves together to fight that monstrosity—but Fernando does not have an ear to listen to their plea. He is not one to quibble over such matters as preserving nature's bounty, much less over such a "trifle" as protecting Philippine history and culture.

Clara, I'm praying to God that He stays Fernando's hand. He listens neither to ordinary folks nor to provincial resolutions that most emphatically tells him to stop and desist from pursuing any plans that will defoul Mother Nature and Philippine honor.

Clara, I'd like you to join me on April 22 for a special Konyerto para sa Kalikasan to be held at the Quezon Convention Center in Lucena City. This is another creative way that Mang Ado and his fellow concerned citizens have come up with to combat Fernando's plan.

SUMMER is a time to relax. Four Xavier grade school graduates certainly deserve to have fun this summer. Last month they were given the Xavier Award, an honor given to students for doing their best in their studies, their extra-curricular activities and for serving their communities.

These cool awardees are incoming high school students Luis Locsin, Lorenzo Mangubat, Thompson Tang and Laurence Go.

"You have to embody the six C's—character, compassion, competence, culture, community and conscience," says Luis about the award.

A two-time Xavier awardee, Luis was also student council president and a varsity swimming team and tennis team athlete. He finished the school year with an average above 96% to get first honors.

Lorenzo is not only a talented violinist, he was a Taekwondo varsity member, a boy scout, and president of his class. His teacher says Lorenzo used to be timid but really bloomed this year. He graduated with second honors.

Thompson and Laurence are the academic stars. They both received seven medals of academic excellence, diligence awards, and first honors. Aside from serving as SC secretary and treasurer respectively, they were presidents of their respective classes and members of the Math Trainers Guild.

Being a model student wasn't always easy though.

"There were a lot of things that I planned this year that didn't happen or happened in a way I didn't like," Luis says. "I had to accept it and not react badly to the situation."

Laurence says sometimes he was so tired, he didn't want to study anymore. "But you have to remember you have God-given talent so don't waste it," he says. Thompson says that if students learn to manage their time, they'll be able to accomplish lots.

"God has great plans for everyone," Lorenzo says with a smile.

Leaving it all behind

By Julien Dio
Miriam College Grade School
Quezon City

IT WAS the last day of exams, and the last day of school. I walked slowly out of the classroom. I didn't want it to be summer.

I remembered my favorite teachers, there were three of them. One was moderately tall and wore glasses. She was our Homeroom adviser and Math teacher. One was very thin and serious. She taught Reading subject. The last one was chubby and funny and kept telling me to "keep writing." He taught Language.

A tear ran down my face. For me, it was hard to say goodbye. I had too many memories to fit in my head, and I was afraid I'd forget them.

I felt as if I were crossing a bridge from the 5th grade to the 6th grade. But I still had the memories in my heart, even if I didn't have any pictures, I wouldn't be able to forget everything so easily.

I could remember everything right from the start and feel good whenever I did. Because I had a great soul inside me that would never, ever forget those treasured moments. All I had to do was to keep those memories in my heart and I'll never need a camera to rely on.

HP Fan

HELLO! I am a JUNIOR INQUIRER fan and I look forward to reading your newspaper every Saturday. I especially like Straight From JI Readers. This is a reaction to Mariane R. Maggay's letter which appeared in this section on the April 5, 2003 issue. Like her, I'm also a Harry Potter fan. I can't live a day without reading one of the series! I have all the books and I've read them lots of times! I just can't get enough of HP! One time, I was reading a book for my book report and we weren't supposed to bring that book home. Then I picked up my Harry Potter book and read. When I got back to school to finish my report, I forgot all about the book I was supposed to read 'coz I was busy reading HP!!!—PATRICIA MAE C.

Stop Pollution!

HERE are some tips to stop pollution: 1) plant more trees for fresher air; 2) don't buy things you won't even use after all; 3) avoid burning trash; 4) recycle non-biodegradable trash; 5) learn to compost biodegradable trash; 6) and ask your parents to check your family car periodically for smoke emissions. When more people follow these tips, we will become an example to other countries. We will make a difference. We will help make Mother Earth—the only habitable planet known to man—a better place to live in.—MARK JEROME MALABANAN CASTILLO, 11, Kingsville Subdivision, Antipolo City

Ang Lumang Aparador

Kuwento ni Genaro R. Gojo Cruz
Guhit ni Yasmin Ong

WALANG sinuman ang nakabubuhay ng lumang aparador kundi sina Nanay at Tatay lang. Ano kaya ang nasa loob nito? Siguro isang dambuhalang damit. At kapag umuulan o dumadagundong ang langit sa kulog at kidlat, kaagad na tatakpan ni Nanay ng puting kumot ang malaking salamin ng lumang aparador saka isasara ang mga bintana. Sa isip ko, pati ba kulog at kidlat ay takot sa malaking salamin sa harap ng lumang aparador?

Lumang-luma na ang aparador. Kulay-putik ito. May maliliit na ukit ng mga bulaklak sa bawat gilid at isang mukha ng anghel sa itaas ng salamin. Kung titingnan nga sa malayo ang aparador, tila isa itong malaking kuweba. Naisip ko nga minsan, baka may natutulog na higante sa loob nito, kaya hindi nabubuhay ninuman maliban kina Nanay at Tatay.

Iniwasan kong mapadaan dito. Natatakot kasi akong baka magising ang higante sa loob ng kulay-putik na aparador.

ISANG araw, binuksan ni Nanay ang lumang aparador upang kunin ang isang mahalagang dokumento. Lumangitngit ang pinto nito. Nagsimula na ring kumalat ang isang pambihirang amoy. Parang isang luma at inamag na libro. Natakot ako. Baka lamunin si Nanay ng dambu-lang damit o kainin ng higanteng natutulog sa luma at kulay-putik na aparador. Ngunit walang dambuhalang damit at higanteng kumuha kay Nanay nang buksan niya ang aparador. Sinilip ko ang loob ngunit agad-agad itong isinara ni Nanay.

Minsan naglakas-loob akong manalamin sa lumang aparador. Malaki kasi ang salamin, kitangkita ang buong katawan ko. Ngunit umihip ang kakaibang hangin sa aking likuran, nagtaasan ang puting kurtina sa bintana at nagamoy sampagita ang paligid.

Pakiramdam ko, may isang babaing nakaputi sa aking likod. Kumaripas ako ng takbo. Mula noon, hindi na ako nagsalamin sa luma at kulay-putik na aparador.

"Sa Linggo, magsisimba tayo sa bayan ng tatay mo. Ika-pitong kaarawan mo kaya kailangang maganda ang iyong isusuot."

"Halika."

May kinuhang isang bungkos ng mga susi si Nanay. At sa bungkos ng mga susi ay may namumukod-tanging malaki at kalawanging susi. Ito pala ang susi ng lumang aparador. Bumilis ang tibok ng aking puso. Natatakot ako. Baka lamunin kami ni Nanay ng dambuhalang damit o ng natutulog na higante sa loob ng lumang aparador.

Muling lumangitngit ang pinto ng lumang aparador na tila nabibiyak na lupa at nagsimulang kumalat ang amoy luma at may amag na libro. Hindi ko alam kung tatakpan ko ang aking tenga o ang aking ilong. Ngunit hindi man lang natatakot si Nanay.

NAMANGHA ako nang ilabas ni Nanay ang isang napakagandang bestida. Noon lamang ako nakakita ng ganoong kagandang bestida. Kulay rosas ito, pinaulanan ng pulang-pula at maliliit na buwang rosas. At mayroon pa itong isang malaking lasong puti sa likod. Lapat na lapat sa akin ang kay gandang bestida. Parang isinukat ng isang modista.

Linggo ng Wika sa aming eskuwelahan, kailangan kong magsuot ng kasuotang Pilipino, kaagad inilabas ni Nanay sa lumang aparador ang kasuotang Maria Clara na punung-puno ng masasalimuot na burda.

At noong ako'y magkumunyon, inilabas naman ni Nanay ang puting-puting bestida na may terno pang belo na yari sa telang pinya.

At noong ako'y sabitan ng medalya, namangha ang aking mga guro at mga kaklase sa aking isinuot na bestida. May tela itong parang sinasaniban ng liwanag sa gabi.

Minsan kinuha ko ang isang bungkos ng susi ni Nanay at sinubukang buksan ang aparador ngunit hindi ko mabuksan.

Mahigpit ang pagkakapinid ng pinto at anuman ang gawin kong pihit at pagpapaikut-ikot sa kalawanging susi ay di ko mabuksan ang lumang aparador.

Isang gabi habang nagsusuklay sa harap ng mahiwagang salamin si Nanay ay itinanong ko ang tungkol sa kulay putik na aparador.

"Ang lumang aparador na ito ang minana ko sa iyong Lola Dominga. Kilalang magaling na mananahi at magbuburda ang iyong Lola noong panahon ng Amerikano. Kapag may sobrang tela, itinatahi ako ng bestida ng iyong Lola," ang sabi ni Nanay.

Kinuha ni Nanay ang isang bungkos ng susi at binuksan ang luma at kulay-putik na aparador. Kinakabahan pa rin ako ngunit namangha ako sa aking nakita nang tuluyang mabuksan at tumambad sa akin ang laman ng aparador.

Maayos na nakasabit ang kay-gagandang damit na may iba't ibang kulay, magkakasunod ang laki, at may mga buhay na buhay na burda. Maraming mga nakaikid na sinulid at kahon sa ibaba.

"Hulaan mo. Hindi mo ba nakikilala?" ang sabi lang ni Nanay sa akin sabay kindat at pumustu-pustura pa.

HINDI ko talaga mahulaan kung sino ang batang nasa larawan. Pumustu-pustura uli si Nanay at ginaya pa ang posing ng bata sa larawan.

"Ay! Oo nga!" laking gulat ko. Si Nanay ang nasa larawan, ang may suot ng mga magagandang damit na isinuot ko. Hindi maubos ang tawanan namin ni Nanay.

Mula noon, sa tuwing mada-raan ako at magsasalamain sa luma at kulay-putik na aparador, lagi kong naaalala ang magaling na mananahi at magbuburda kong Lola, ang aking Lola Dominga.

Si Genaro ay tubong Bulacan. Nag-aaral siya ngayon ng MA Ma-likhaing Pagsulat (Filipino) sa Ate-neo de Manila University. Giniba na ang kanilang lumang bahay at tanging natitira na lamang ay ang lumang aparador na magpahang-gang ngayo'y kanyang damitan. Maaari kayong sumulat sa kanya sa makata24@lycos.com.

SHIRLEY'S PETS

Previously in Shirley's Pets Mystery Duck's Entry:

Pancho's group has taken my team's membership rings. These rings have the power to render its bearers invisible when humans are near.

Deprived of our rings, we were unexpectedly revealed to Shirley. Pancho, in the meantime, began to gloat as his gang vanished from sight. They were shortly rendered visible again by a device which Experimental brought to the scene.

Now the search for Sinatra and the Gardushdush begins.
